CUC execs snub impeachment hearing

Because of allegedly deficient notices, Commonwealth Utilities Corp. officials did not show up yesterday morning to testify before the Special Committee on Impeachment on the $190.8-million, 25-year power purchase agreement that is the subject of an allegation of corruption against Gov. Benigno R. Fitial.

» OAG says subpoena notice 'deficient'

But Committee chair and House minority leader Joe Deleon Guerrero (R-Saipan) said it had more to do with "miscommunication or lack of communication" between CUC acting executive director Alan Fletcher and CUC legal counsel on the accommodation that the panel extended to Fletcher. The committee initially gave Fletcher five days from receipt of subpoena to appear but Fletcher asked the panel to reschedule it to an earlier date—yesterday—because he was going off-island.

The panel thus approved an earlier date for Fletcher to appear before them.

Deleon Guerrero subpoenaed on Wednesday Fletcher, CUC chief financial officer Charles Warren, and deputy director for power Wallon Young to testify on the power deal Friday.

Assistant attorney general Rebecca Wrightson, legal counsel for CUC, said "these subpoenas are untimely because notice is deficient pursuant to the require-

Soldiers' families briefed on 2013 deployment

Families of soldiers from the Northern Marianas were given updates on the pending deployment of the Guam Army National Guard's 1-294th Infantry Regiment, in a briefing last night at the Saipan World Resort.

Lt. Col. Michael Tougher, battalion commander, spoke to the families about what they and their soldiers can expect in the upcoming months before the unit leaves for its mobilization training in February, at training sites in the U.S. mainland. The battalion is slated to deploy to Afghanistan early next year.

There are 18 soldiers from the CNMI who are assigned to the 1-294th Infantry Regiment, made up of both males and females. There are no females directly assigned to any positions in infantry units, but the females who are deploying with the battalion are part of F Company, a combat service support unit that was attached to the battalion.

Tougher talked to the soldiers and their families who attended the meeting about the unit's scheduled training in October, at Camp Roberts in California, and the type of mission the unit is expected to conduct during deployment.

CNMI LeakSource posts court papers on House vice speaker, others

REPORTER

CNMI LeakSource, a new website seeking to expose government and business secrets, posted three new sets of documents online on Thursday, including a court order on outstanding judgments against House vice speaker Felicidad Ogomoro (Cov-Saipan) and Pacific Information Bank, a court order against Republican Precinct 2 candidate Liana S. Hofschneider, and an American Samoa media article about Division of Environmental Quality manager Frances Castro, who was charged with reckless driving and speeding.

CNMI LeakSource posted a Feb. 23, 2012, court order, signed by Superior Court presiding judge Robert C. Naraja, pertaining to the outstanding judgments against the incumbent House vice speaker.

"She has not one, but four collection cases against her that go back 10-12 years. Combined, she owes over $100,000. She entered into an agreement to pay this combined debt off, but she failed to

Suspect in car burning case allowed to post bail

The Superior Court has allowed a former disc jockey accused of setting fire to a car to post bail.

Associate Judge Joseph N. Camacho modified the $10,000 cash bail imposed on Aziz Peter Mettao and allowed the 27-year-old suspect to post just 10 percent of the amount, or $1,000, plus a $9,000 appearance bond.

Mettao's mother, Julita, was named as the suspect's primary third party custodian and his godmother, Ana Maria Limes, as secondary third party custodian.

The former disc jockey of Power 99 Studio is accused of setting fire to the company's vehicle on Sept. 10, 2012.

Mettao is prohibited from having direct or indirect contact with Power 99 Radio Station and is required to observe a daily 7pm to 7am curfew.

Camacho said that any person accused of committing a crime is presumed innocent until proven guilty. "Therefore a person charged with a crime should not be denied freedom unless there is a good reason. An arrest only initiates the criminal justice system. An arrest is not a conviction," he explained.

He pointed out that in felony cases it is the jury that weighs the evidence and issues the verdict.

"Today is only a bail hearing and we are not yet at the trial stage," Camacho said.

Arson investigator Norman Skilling stated in his report that police received a call from a man on Sept. 10, 2012, at 3:51am that a vehicle was on fire west of the Power 99 building.

When police officer Daniel Smith arrived at the scene, he saw a silver Hyundai Tucson with license plate ADY 761 with its interior engulfed in flames.

A firefighter came and extinguished the blaze. The vehicle sustained extensive damage inside. The window glasses were shattered and the upper portion of the front windshield had cracks.

Skilling said a witness saw a man, later identified as Mettao, throw a bottle to the left rear window of the Power 99 vehicle, triggering the fire. He saw the suspect throw another bottle at the car, but this time the bottle bounced.

The witness said the fire caught the suspect in the back. The witness and his companion chased the suspect who ran toward a house.

The second witness recognized the suspect as Mettao. While Smith was still at the scene, a person approached and disclosed that Mettao was hiding near the area.

Smith spotted Mettao and escorted him to the main roadway where he then called the two witnesses. The witnesses identified Mettao as the person they saw burning the vehicle. (Ferdie de la Torre)

Judge acquits mother of child abuse

Superior Court Associate Judge David A. Wiseman has acquitted a woman of child abuse charges.

Wiseman granted Wednesday the Office of Public Defender's motion for judgment to acquit Tahira S. Miah.

In a written order issued yesterday, the judge noted that there was no evidence presented in the CNMI government's case about the type of punishment that is beyond the scope of corporal punishment, an element the statute requires.

In a criminal trial, Wiseman said the government bears the burden of proving each element of its case beyond a reasonable doubt.

"It is the holding of this court...that the prosecution failed to meet its burden with establishing a prima facie case whereby a rational trier of fact could find one of the elements of a prima facie case beyond a reasonable doubt, to wit: that the alleged pain or injuries was clearly beyond the scope of reasonable corporal punishment," he said.

Wiseman said a trial court should deny a motion for a judgment of acquittal unless the government's evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction.

The 25-year-old Miah is represented in the case by assistant public defenders Daniel Guidotti and Douglas Hartig. Assistant attorneys general Nicole Driscoll and Darren Robinson represented the government.

The Office of the Attorney General had charged Miah with child abuse for beating her child on Aug. 6, 2011. It was Tahira Miah's former husband, Mohammad Jahan-gir Miah, who filed the complaint.

In November 2011, the federal court placed Tahira Miah on probation for two years for her role in a driver's license scam. (Ferdie de la Torre)

She graduated from Marianas High School in 2000 and also got her associate degree in Liberal Arts from Northern Marianas College before enlisting into the armed forces. She joined the U.S. Navy in 2005. Escobar received both a bachelor's degree in Psychology from University of Phoenix and a bachelor's degree in Nursing with honors from National University. She will be reporting to Officer Development School in Newport Rhode Island and later reporting to Naval Hospital Portsmouth, Virginia. She is the daughter of DPS Deputy Commissioner Ambrosio T. Ogomoro, who witnessed her swearing in.

PSS begins implementing common-core state standards

By MONETH G. DEPOSA
moneth_deposa@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Despite the ongoing financial challenges, all Public School System teachers and administrators will still be able to continue with their training for the new national standard, thanks to a grant from the federal government.

Tim Thornburgh, federal programs officer for PSS, told Saipan Tribune yesterday that PSS was recently approved a $61,000 grant by the U.S. Department of Education for the teachers' training on common-core standards. This will be available for drawdown next month, the beginning of the new fiscal year.

To ensure that all needs for the workshop will be met, Thornburgh said an additional $30,000 has been reprogrammed from the federal grants that PSS received in fiscal year 2012.

Starting this new school year, CNMI public schools have adopted the common core state standards, aligning them with 48 other states and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

In an earlier interview with Education Commissioner Rita A. Sablan, Ed.D., she said that PSS is only the second U.S. territory to adopt the state standards. Most U.S. states are also implementing the standards beginning this school year.

The common core state standards define the knowledge and skills students should have with in their K-12 education careers so that they will graduate high school and are able to succeed in entry-level, credit-bearing academic college courses and in workforce training programs.

This initiative is a state-led effort coordinated by the National Governors Association Center for Best Practices and the Council of Chief State School Officers. These standards were developed in collaboration with teachers, school administrators, and experts to provide a clear and consistent framework to prepare children for college and the workforce.

The standards provide teachers and parents with a common understanding of what students are expected to learn and provide appropriate benchmarks for all students, regardless of where they live.

CRIME OF THE WEEK

Attempted robbery at barbershop

Crime Stoppers is seeking the community's assistance for information on an attempted robbery that occurred at Lilly's Beauty and Barber Shop in Chalan Kanoa.

On Thursday, Sept. 20, 2012, at about 9:45pm, police responded and learned that the victim, a 41-year-old Asian female, was about to close the beauty shop when the suspect, who was riding a bicycle, stopped and entered the establishment.

The suspect—described as a dark-skinned islander male, about 5'7" tall, 180 lbs, wearing a grey tank top with the words "Palau" printed on it—grabbed the victim's red purse from a table and attempted to flee. The victim chased the suspect, grabbing her purse and screaming for help.

During the struggle the suspect let go of the purse and the victim managed to pull the suspect's shirt off. The suspect fled on the bicycle, leaving one slipper and his shirt as evidence. The victim was not injured and nothing was stolen.

COMMUNITY BRIEFS

4 beach sites red-flagged

The Division of Environment Quality has red-flagged beaches adjacent to the Tanapag Meeting Hall, Central Repair Shop, south Puerto Rico Dump, and the Smiling Cove Marina and is advising the public not to fish or swim within 300 feet of these locations for the next 48 hours or until otherwise notified.

DEQ said that samples collected from these locations had excessive concentrations of fecal indicator bacteria (enterococci) that exceeded the CNMI Marine Water Quality Standards. These bacteria can indicate the presence of human and animal waste in the water. Water samples were taken from 38 locations on Saipan this week. For more information, contact DEQ at 664-8500. # Hyatt kitchen experts join NMTI's roster of instructors

REPORTER

Two kitchen experts from one of the major hotels on Saipan will be helping out at the Northern Marianas Trade Institute to train the Commonwealth's future culinary professionals.

Blake E. Carothers and Shawn Sweeney, both employees of the Hyatt Regency Saipan, are the newest additions to the teaching workforce of the trade institute, which offers a short-term culinary arts program.

Carothers and Sweeney bring to 15 the number of instructors at the institute for the new cycle of enrollees. The two will join instructor Norisa Camacho in the school's culinary arts program, which will open next month.

Carothers, who is Hyatt's chef de cuisine, said yesterday that their curriculum will range from the basics in the culinary arts to advanced lessons.

Carothers was with Hyatt Regency Saipan in 2009. He then transferred to the Hyatt Regency in Lake Tahoe as its lead banquets/butcher for more than two years. He re-joined Hyatt Saipan as its chef de cuisine in June this year.

Before joining the hotel industry, Carothers worked in various capacities for the University of Wyoming, Texas Tech University, Ark Regional Services, and Ministry of Economic Affairs in Taiwan.

He obtained his bachelor's degree in political science from University of Wyoming in 2005 and earned a masters of arts in communication in 2008. In 2009, he obtained his associate in culinary arts degree from Le Cordon Bleu College of Culinary Arts.

A first-time instructor at the institute, Carothers is confident that despite the limited instructional time for the program, students will gain many great lessons and experiences similar to what students can learn in a two-year culinary arts program. Already excited to meet his students, Carothers said he has only one expectation—to make every student in his class become successful in the program.

Like Carothers, Sweeney is also a graduate of Le Cordon Bleu College of Culinary Arts where she obtained a patisserie and baking associate degree last month. She is currently Hyatt's pastry chef in-training.

Prior to this position, she served as cart lead in Herbs

Carothers

Sweeney

Mac and Cheese in Portland, Oregon. She also worked for Eclexion

Arts and Fashions in Portland, Oregon as the company's caterer and assistant business manager and as field manager for Fund for Public Interest in Portland.

Sweeney is a recipient of the Blue Grant Scholarship and won first place in the Gingerbread House Competition in Le Cordon Bleu and was also the institution's Dean's Honors List in 2010.

Sweeney said this is her first time on the island and the first time to be an instructor.

Carothers and Sweeney will be teaching 20 students each class.

High Court affirms probate court jurisdiction in easement dispute

The CNMI Supreme Court issued Tuesday a ruling that affirms an order of the trial court—sitting in probate—that found an easement implied by prior existing use extending over land owned by Gerald P. Reyes for the benefit of land owned by Akieva C. Reyes.

The deceased, Charles P. Reyes Sr., owned various properties in Chalan Laulau, Saipan. Although these properties were subdivided over the years and included two access easements, there was evidence that Reyes did not strictly follow property boundaries when accessing his properties. After Reyes passed away in September 2006, the family submitted his will to the probate court for distribution of his estate. The probate court distributed Reyes' property in accordance with his will.

In relevant part, Reyes' son Gerald and daughter Akieva received lots that shared a common boundary and the existing access to the carport on Akieva's lot traveled over Gerald's property. After obtaining the property, Gerald erected a chain-link fence around his property. This fence cut off the existing access road to Akieva's lot and forced individuals entering her lot to make a sharp 90-degree turn onto the property from the easement road.

Akieva brought a motion before the probate court seeking an easement over Gerald's property for the benefit of her property. Akieva alleged that she was entitled to an easement based on Reyes' previous use of Gerald's property to access the house on Akieva's property. The probate court granted the easement and Gerald appealed.

On appeal, Gerald argued that the probate court did not have jurisdiction to hear the easement claim because the probate court has only the jurisdiction conferred upon it by statute. The Supreme Court analyzed the probate court jurisdictional statute, which provides probate courts with jurisdiction "over all subject matter relating to the estates of decedents," as well as other Commonwealth cases and cases from other jurisdictions with similar probate statutes. Noting that the easement dispute between Gerald and Akieva was "related to" Reyes' estate since both properties originated as estate property, the High Court held that the probate court had jurisdiction to hear the easement claim.

As for the merits of the probate court's grant of the easement, the High Court looked to whether Reyes expressed intent not to grant an easement to Akieva and to whether the easement was reasonably necessary to Akieva's use and enjoyment of her property. Regarding intent, the justices affirmed the probate court's holding that there was no evidence of intent not to grant an easement. As for whether the easement was reasonably necessary to Akieva's use of the property, the justices reviewed evidence relied upon by the probate court, including the difficulty of accessing Akieva's property without an easement and testimony that exiting the property currently requires trespassing on another adjacent property. Based on this evidence, the High Court affirmed the probate court's granting of an easement to Akieva.

The Supreme Court's full opinion is In re Estate of Charles P. Reyes, 2012 MP 13, and can be found at http://www.cnmilaw.org/supreme\_12.htm. (NMI Judiciary)

Let's Move Marianas! goes to Mount Carmel School

By MONETH G. DEPOSA
REPORTER

Students of Mount Carmel School learned of some healthy tips and a couple of energetic moves when the Let's Move Marianas campaign of the Division of Public Health visited the campus this week to promote a healthy lifestyle.

Led by Public Health director Roxanne Diaz, Mount Carmel students were taught about the importance of fighting childhood obesity and childhood cancer.

Diaz was joined by campaign member Amber Mendiola, who taught the students about healthy nutrition as well as the campaign's signature dance routine.

Diaz explained to students that junk food is called that for a reason, citing the amount of sugar and fats that saturate many of the snacks students eat.

In an effort to enforce healthy nutrition, Diaz went so far as to challenge school president Galvin Deleon Guerrero to ban all junk food on campus.

In response, Deleon Guerrero said that he has already taken steps to limit junk food at the school and all other schools in the CNMI.

He said that as a member of the CNMI State Board of Education, he voted to adopt the new nutrition standards of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Under these new standards, food vendors in schools are required to provide more nutritious food options and to limit junk food on their menus.

The morning's focus on nutrition then shifted to physical activity as Mendiola invited students to follow the Let's Move Marianas choreographer in learning a simple but energetic dance routine. Students and teachers all followed along to moves that made them jog, dance, groove, and sweat.

Junior Class president Kaylani Lebría, who is also an accomplished athlete, particularly liked seeing her teachers dancing. "Seeing the teachers dance was something new. It was nice to see them having fun," she said.

The dance routine will be incorporated into a flash mob that will be staged at the Let's Move Marianas signature event on Sept. 29 at the Gilbert C. Ada Gymnasium.

The Fitial administration endorsed September as CNMI Childhood Cancer and Childhood Obesity Awareness Month with the theme "Let's Move Marianas!"

The campaign is part of first lady Michelle Obama's Let's Move campaign to raise a generation of healthier kids. To learn more about Let's Move Marianas, call 236-8638 or email letsmovemarianas@gmail.com.

Fitial extends CUC, CHC emergency declarations anew

By HAIDEE V. EUGENIO
haidee_eugenio@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Gov. Benigno R. Fitial extended anew his executive orders declaring a state of emergency for the Commonwealth Utilities Corp. and the Commonwealth Healthcare Corp. which allows him to have direct control over these agencies and suspend procurement laws or rules to address those emergencies for at least another 30 days.

Fitial signed the two separate EOs on Wednesday, a few days after the previous EOs lapsed.

In the CHC executive order, Fitial suspended all statutory or regulatory provisions and allowed for the reprogramming of funds to address the emergency.

The governor extended the CHC emergency declaration two days after the U.S. Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services placed CHC under a severe sanction of "immediate jeopardy," which could result in loss of funding support from the federal agency.

CHC has 23 days to get into compliance before funding is cut. Immediate jeopardy indicates that the provider's noncompliance with one or more requirements of participation in the Medicare and Medicaid program has or is "likely to cause serious injury, harm, impairment, or death."

In the CUC executive order, Fitial again assumed all of the executive power of CUC, including those vested in the board of directors and the executive director.

He also continued the suspension of Public Law 17-34 concerning the Public Utilities Commission's regulation of CUC and its actions and any oversight of renewable energy contracts.

The emergency declaration also continues to allow CUC to hire foreign nationals for services needed.

Some House members, including

Rep. Ray Yumul (R-Saipan) and House minority leader Joe Deleon Guerrero (R-Saipan), have been saying that the House should not always automatically accept the governor's emergency declarations, to no avail.

Fitial's executive orders have not been challenged by the House, only by the Senate. Amendments need the action of both the House and Senate.

Kosrae joins effort to create massive shark sanctuary

KOSRAE, Federated States of Micronesia—Kosrae has become the first member of the Federated States of Micronesia to establish shark protections in its waters. The unanimous vote by the legislature in Kosrae, a small island of 7,700 people in the Pacific, is an important step in the creation of the world's first regional shark sanctuary, which will encompass 2 million square miles of ocean. The legislation now heads to Gov. Lyndon Jackson's desk for signature.

"The protection of sharks fits into an even larger conservation goal for Micronesia," said Gov. Lyndon Jackson. "This goal, called the Micronesia Challenge, seeks to effectively conserve 30 percent of nearshore resources. But some species, especially sharks, swim in and out of protected areas, so additional policies are needed."

When signed into law, the Kosrae sanctuary will ban the sale, trade, and possession of shark products in Kosrae and prohibit commercial shark fishing in the 12-mile area under its jurisdiction. Sen. Tulensa Palik, vice chairman of the state's Committee on Resources and Development, introduced the bill.

"This is an extremely important piece of legislation," said Palik. "I am proud to have Kosrae be a part of a global movement to protect sharks and the health of our ocean."

During the Micronesian Chief Executive Summit in July 2011, Jackson and other leaders pledged to join a much larger effort to create the Micronesia Regional Shark Sanctuary. The agreement includes all four members of the Federated States of Micronesia—Yap, Chuuk, Pohnpei, and Kosrae—as well as the Northern Mariana Islands, Guam, Palau, and the Marshall Islands. It will result in a regional sanctuary covering 2 million square miles.

"Micronesia is leading the world in shark conservation," said Jill Hepp, director of shark conservation at the Pew

Environment Group. "Kosrae is an important piece in the puzzle to protect sharks in the region."

"Conservation has always been an integral part of life in Kosrae," said Andy George, executive director of the Kosrae Conservation and Safety Organization. "This is something our people wanted."

Each year, up to 73 million sharks are killed by people, largely for their fins to supply the demand for shark fin soup. Of the 150 species of shark assessed as Threatened or Near Threatened with extinction by the International Union for Conservation of Nature, at least 30 are known to swim in Micronesia's waters, including scalloped hammerheads, whale sharks, oceanic whitetips, and several species of reef sharks.

If the other members of the Federated States of Micronesia move forward with their plan to create a sanctuary in the next year, 2.9 million square kilometers (1.1 million square miles) will be added to the more than 4.7 million square kilometers (1.8 million square miles) of ocean worldwide that have already been protected by six shark sanctuaries: Palau, the Maldives, Tokelau, Honduras, the Bahamas, and the Marshall Islands. ments of Commonwealth Code Title 1, Section 1302."

"Therefore, Mr. Fletcher, Mr. Warren, and Mr. Young will not be appearing to testify at the committee's hearing," Wrightson told Deleon Guerrero.

Citing that particular statute, Deleon Guerrero said a person being served a subpoena needs to be given at least five days to testify, unless a shorter time is necessary, "and if a shorter time is necessary, it has to be approved by the majority of the members and so we did do that."

In the notice given to Fletcher, however, the committee did not indicate that the majority of the panel approved his appearance in less than five days.

Deleon Guerrero said the CUC legal counsel also pointed out that the subpoena did not indicate that the CUC officials should appear with their counsels.

House legal counsel Joe Tajeron, who helped draft the subpoenas, said yesterday that they made minor technical mistakes. He, however, said the panel assumed that CUC officials would bring their counsels anyway.

Wrightson, in her one-pager letter to the committee chair, said, "Should the committee decide to reissue subpoenas that comply with the Commonwealth Code, Mr. Fletcher, Mr. Warren, and Mr. Young will appear as requested."

The committee voted to revise the subpoenas that have yet to be sent out, and send amended subpoenas for those that were already sent, to add language indicating the committee approved the appearance of witnesses less than five days from receipt of the notice and that they should bring their counsel if they so choose.

Because Fletcher is going off-island, his and other CUC officials' scheduled appearance before the panel will be moved to a later date.

Deleon Guerrero said he spoke by phone to the CUC legal counsel, who he said "needs more time to prepare for this."

"I think it's because the testimony that will be provided during this proceeding is admissible in court and there's a court case pending, the TRO. They want to be prepared," Deleon Guerrero said.

He added that the redrafting and rescheduling of hearings will impact the committee's timeline, although he said they would still be able to meet the 30-day deadline, which ends on Oct. 13.

Deleon Guerrero said that's because Aug. 13 was the first meeting of the committee, so the 30 days started from that date, and not on the day the committee was created by the speaker.

Rep. Joe Palacios (R-Saipan) said he has some questions for Fletcher, given that during a hearing at the Senate in August, Fletcher said he didn't know that a $190.8-million power purchase agreement had been signed, only to hear the governor a week or two later telling the media that Fletcher was there on the day Fitial and then attorney general Edward T. Buckingham signed the deal on Aug. 3.

"It is more of setting the record straight. Integrity and sincerity is in question here," Palacios told Saipan Tribune.

All eight members of the Special Committee on Impeachment were present yesterday.

The panel is tasked to review and make recommendations to the full House on a resolution impeaching the governor.

House Resolution 17-111 lists 16 articles of impeachment against Fitial for felony, corruption, and neglect of duty.

The committee also crossed off from its list of witnesses three individuals, including former Corrections commissioner Dolores Aldan, because she's off-island.

Aldan was the Corrections commissioner when a federal inmate was temporarily taken out of jail to be transported to the governor's house to give the governor a massage. This "massage incident" is the subject of allegations of corruption and felony.

The two others who won't be subpoenaed anymore are Abigail Borja and Linda Ongelungel because either they're off island or can't be located.

Coast Guard sends new response boat to Guam

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The U.S. Coast Guard delivered a new 45-foot boat, the Response Boat-Medium 45702, to Station Apra Harbor, Guam on Sept. 15, 2012. The USCG is currently replacing its fleet of 41-foot utility boats with the RB-Ms series craft.

This is the second RB-M scheduled to be stationed at Apra Harbor. RB-Ms are designed to meet Coast Guard mission requirements for search and rescue; ports, waterways and coastal security; drug interdiction; and migrant interdiction. Additionally, the RB-M will support marine safety, aids to navigation, marine environmental protection, and defense readiness missions.

"I am pleased that Guam has received the RB-M to help the Coast Guard carry out its duties more effectively," said Delegate Madeleine Z. Bordallo (D-GU). "In particular, this response boat will be used to conduct search and rescue missions and will be critical to our readiness capabilities. Further, these boats will assist our Coast Guardsmen in monitoring and identifying illegal fishing activities around Guam." (PR)

SOLDIERS

He also praised how all the soldiers from CNMI came through a recent Soldier Readiness Processing without any issues. The SRP is where each soldier goes through a review of his or her personnel records, and also undergoes a physical check-up.

"They're committed, dedicated soldiers," Tougher told the family members. He also promised the families that the Guam National Guard leadership will make sure that the battalion soldiers get the training they need to ensure they are well prepared for the deployment.

Close to 60 soldiers and family members attended the briefing last night. (GUARNG) comply with the payment schedule and was subject to losing her family home with the office space above it," CNMI LeakSource said, posting a copy of the 11-page order.

LEAKSOURCE

The court order shows Ogomoro owes money to China Color Printing, WinGuide Color Printing Co. Ltd., Benigno Fejeran dba Solid Builders, and Younis Art Studio Inc. dba Marianas Variety.

Another document posted on Thursday was an American Samoa news article about DEQ's Castro, who was pulled over by police for speeding, among other things.

Castro was in Pago Pago, American Samoa in August 2012 as one of the CNMI delegates to the 28th meeting of the U.S. Coral Reef Task Force, which was also attended by Gov. Benigno R. Fitial and press secretary Angel Demapan.

Castro, when asked for comment, said the article in Samoa News "was sensationalized and events described such as being arrested are untrue."

She said she was charged with reckless driving and speeding for driving at a speed of 32 miles per hour on a 20-mph zone, which she said was "completely unintentional."

"They could not proceed with a DUI because there was lack of evidence. I didn't fail the sobriety tests as indicated because I had a witness who was willing to testify; unfortunately I was in the middle of an enforcement campaign and became a statistic. I know who leaked this source and it is someone who didn't get a job associated with the Micronesia Challenge a few years ago and has since been blaming me for not being hired which I had nothing to do with the decision. This is their way off getting back [at] me," Castro told Saipan Tribune.

CNMI LeakSource also posted a court order against Hofschneider, a Precinct 2 candidate under the Republican Party.

Unlike the other documents, this court order dates back to 2004 and orders Hofschneider to pay Mobil $115,684.82.

The Fitial administration and at least one concerned citizen, however, are urging the public to exercise caution on the nature of information being leaked and posted online as well as the motive behind the postings.

Press secretary Angel Demapan said, "Accountability and transparency in government is the total opposite of anonymous sources."

Concerned citizen Glen Hunter said, "Certain precautions should be taken when leaking information or furthering leaked information," and hopes that the new site "does not allow just any rumor or gossip to make its way into the public domain as 'proven' leaks without due diligence on the part of the site owner."

CNMI LeakSource earlier posted an anonymously leaked bench warrant for Saipan Mayor Donald Flores for failing to appear in court on Dec. 7, 2011, in connection with unpaid debts to Dollar Rent-A-Car. The mayor said he will pay the $300 cash bail.

CNMI LeakSource claims on its website that it was launched to help end corruption in the CNMI. It said certain corrupt individuals are only able to continue their corruption because the public is largely unaware of their acts.

Through its website, it gives a way for anyone in the CNMI "to take part in whistleblower activities with the safety and comfort of guaranteed anonymity; thus removing any chances of repercussion in the future, and removing any fears of retribution that would normally hold someone back from releasing something that the public deserves to know."

Snakes minus birds equals more spiders in Guam

In one of the first studies to examine how the loss of forest birds is affecting Guam's island ecosystem, biologists from Rice University, the University of Washington and the University of Guam found that the Pacific island's jungles have as many as 40 times more spiders than are found on nearby islands like Saipan.

"You can't walk through the jungles in Guam without a stick in your hand to knock down the spider webs," said Haldre Rogers, a Huxley Fellow in Ecology and Evolutionary Biology at Rice and the lead author of a new study this week in the open-access journal PLOS ONE.

The results are some of the first to examine the indirect impact of the brown tree snake in Guam's ecosystem. The snake, which was accidentally introduced to the island in the 1940s, decimated the island's native bird species in one of the most infamous ecological disasters from an invasive species. By the 1980s, 10 of 12 native bird species had been wiped out, and the last two live only in small areas protected by intense snake-trapping.

Rogers and colleagues are investigating whether the loss of birds led to an increase in the spider population in Guam, since many birds consume spiders, compete with spiders for insect prey and utilize spider webs in their nests. Small-scale experiments in other ecosystems have consistently shown a link between the presence of birds and the abundance of spiders, but the new study is the first to examine the impact of bird loss on the scale of an entire forest.

Counting spider webs in Guam and on nearby islands in the Marianas Islands chain was the first step. Rogers said the difference between the number of spiders she and her colleagues counted in Guam and three nearby islands that still have birds "was far more dramatic than what any small-scale experiments had previously found." She said the findings underscore the importance of using both observed counts and controlled experiments when attempting to predict how entire ecosystems will react to change.

Rogers landed her first job out of college in Guam in 2002. "I had no idea where it was," she recalled. "I had to look it up on a map." She quickly fell in love with the narrow, 30-mile-long island, a mecca for tourists who are drawn by the tropical island's beaches, diving and snorkeling.

The U.S. spends more than $1 million a year searching airplanes and cargo to prevent the snakes from escaping Guam. However, the reclusive, nocturnal reptiles are extremely hard to find. Rogers said the average resident or tourist in Guam will never see one, and even those who actively hunt them are hard-pressed to find one, which is one reason the snakes have been impossible to eradicate from the island.

Rogers' first job in Guam was to lead the U.S. Geological Survey's brown tree snake rapid response team, a small group of snake hunters charged with capturing brown tree snakes that manage to get off the island. Specifically, the team's mission is to respond within 24 hours of any sighting of a brown tree snake on any island that is served by flights from Guam.

"When I was out there searching for snakes at night, I spent a lot of time thinking about the differences between the forests

I was walking through and the forests back in Guam," Rogers said. The spider webs were just one difference. The lack of songbirds also make Guam's forests eerily quiet during the day, she said. By the time Rogers enrolled in graduate school at the University of Washington in 2005, she had a number of ideas for ecological field studies aimed at measuring and explaining the differences she'd observed.

"There isn't any other place in the world that has lost all of its insect-eating birds," she said. "There's no other place you can look to see what happens when birds are removed over an entire landscape."

One of the first experiments she had in mind was to investigate all those spider webs, which are much less plentiful elsewhere in the Marianas.

"I certainly wasn't the first to notice the incredible number of spiders in the jungles in Guam, but we were the first to quantify the difference between Guam and nearby islands," Rogers said.

Historically, if ecologists wanted to study how insects reacted to the absence of birds, they would build an "exclosure," a covering designed to keep birds out of their study area. Rogers said most exclosures cover a few branches of one tree, and, in rare cases, an entire tree. Building structures large enough to exclude birds from an entire forest simply isn't affordable, so the brown tree snake has effectively set the stage for experiments that ecologists couldn't otherwise do.

To find out exactly how many spiders were on the island, Rogers' team grabbed a tape measure and spent four months hiking through jungles counting spider webs, as a proxy for spiders. She and study co-authors Janneke Hille Ris Lambers and Josh Tewksbury of the University of Washington and Ross Miller of the University of Guam found that spiders were between two times and 40 times more plentiful in Guam than on neighboring islands.

Rogers said the results were a surprise, because they were several times more than would have been predicted from simply scaling up the numbers from small-scale exclosure studies.

"None of the small-scale experiments recorded that kind of increase," Rogers said. "It suggests that the small-scale experiments had gotten the interaction correct—there is an increase in spiders when you lose birds—but they may have underestimated the effect size."

Rogers said the result "shows that birds have a strong effect on spiders. Anytime you have a reduction in insectivorous birds, the system will probably respond with an increase in spiders. With insectivorous birds in decline in many places in the world, I suspect there has been a concurrent increase in spiders."

In future work, she plans to conduct exclosure experiments on neighboring islands that still have forest birds and compare those results with observations in Guam to determine the exact links between the lost forest birds and the spider population increases.

"Ultimately, we aim to untangle the impact of bird loss on the entire food web, all the way down to plants," she said. "For example, has the loss of birds also led to an increase in the number of plant-eating insects? Or can this increase in spiders compensate for the loss of birds?" ## NATIONAL/CNMI CHILD PASSENGER SAFETY WEEK SEPTEMBER 16 - 22, 2012

Car Seat Recommendations for Children

- Select a car seat based on your child's age and size, and choose a seat that fits in your vehicle and use it every time.
- Always refer to your specific car seat manufacturer's instructions; read the vehicle owner's manual on how to install the car seat using the seat belt or LATCH system; and check height and weight limits.
- To maximize safety, keep your child in the car seat for as long as possible, as long as the child fits within the manufacturer's height and weight requirements.
- Keep your child in the back seat at least through age 12.

REAR-FACING CAR SEAT

Your child under age 1 should always ride in a rear-facing car seat. There are different types of rear-facing car seats: Infant-only seats can only be used rear-facing. Convertible and 3-in-1 car seats typically have higher height and weight limits for the rear-facing position, allowing you to keep your child rear-facing for a longer period of time.

FORWARD-FACING CAR SEAT

Keep your child rear-facing as long as possible. It's the best way to keep him or her safe. Your child should remain in a rear-facing car seat until he or she reaches the top height or weight limit allowed by your car seat's manufacturer. Once your child outgrows the rear-facing car seat, your child is ready to travel in a forward-facing car seat with a harness.

BOOSTER SEAT

Keep your child in a forward-facing car seat with a harness until he or she reaches the top height or weight limit allowed by your car seat's manufacturer. Once your child outgrows the forward-facing car seat with a harness, it's time to travel in a booster seat, but still in the back seat.

SEATBELT

Keep your child in a booster seat until he or she is big enough to fit in a seat belt properly. For a seat belt to fit properly the lap belt must lie snugly across the upper thighs, not the stomach. The shoulder belt should lie snug across the shoulder and chest and not cross the neck or face. Remember: your child should still ride in the back seat because it's safer there.

DESCRIPTION (RESTRAINT TYPE)

A REAR-FACING CAR SEAT is the best seat for your young child to use. It has a harness and in a crash, cradles and moves with your child to reduce the stress to the child's fragile neck and spinal cord.

A FORWARD-FACING CAR SEAT has a harness and tether that limits your child's forward movement during a crash.

A BOOSTER SEAT positions the seat belt so that it fits properly over the stronger parts of your child's body.

A SEAT BELT should lie across the upper thighs and be snug across the shoulder and chest to restrain the child safely in a crash. It should not rest on the stomach area or across the neck.

Anchor. Tether.
LATCH
The next generation of child safety.

Boy Scouts must stay vigilant on molestation

One of the things a Boy Scout must learn by heart is the Scout Law, a list of 12 precepts to live by. A scout, the law asserts in its first point, is "trustworthy." Unfortunately, the organization itself failed that test for a long period in its past.

A story by the Los Angeles Times reveals that from 1970 to 1991, the Boy Scouts of America did not notify authorities or parents of hundreds of cases of suspected child molestation. The Times' findings were based on 1,600 confidential files that were part of a blacklist of adults barred from participation in the organization.

In a 1982 case, a Michigan camp director said he didn't report repeated abuse allegations involving a staff member because the director's higher-ups wanted to protect the individual's reputation, as well as that of the Scout organization. In a 1987 Washington case, one district official complained to the national office that his superior refused to blacklist a former scoutmaster with a molestation conviction. The reason? He had "done so much for camp and is a nice guy."

In recent years, however, the Boy Scouts have cracked down on potential abusers more aggressively. Under the Youth Protection policy, names are added to the blacklist, officially known as the Ineligible Volunteer Files, "whether or not the allegations are proven." In the late 1980s, a "two-deep leadership" policy went into effect, requiring at least two adults for all activities and barring adults from being alone with a scout.

Kansas City writer Diana Reese explained in The Washington Post how the policy works. She spent several days this summer at the H. Roe Bartle Scout camp near Osceola, Mo. Reese wrote that she and the other adults "follow the BSA rules, even when it's a hassle—such as having to have two adults wake up in the middle of the night to administer eye drops when a Scout has pink eye."

The rule not only protects boys, it protects adults from unfounded accusations.

Policies have been further toughened in recent years. Adults must pass a national criminal background check and complete an online "youth protection" course that outlines the proper policies as well as how to recognize signs of abuse. In 2010, adult leaders were required to report abuse suspicions directly to local authorities, whether or not it's required by state law.

More eye-opening cases from what many call the scouts' "perversion files" may come to light. But in recent years the organization has done a good job protecting boys and reducing opportunities for potential molesters. Reports of past problems serve as reminders that scout leaders can't afford to diminish their vigilance.

Are businessmen better presidents?

It's one of Mitt Romney's favorite lines: America needs a businessman in the White House. It's "a basic qualification" for the job, he said in his speech at the Republican convention last month, "one that's essential to (the) task."

But what does history tell us? Have our greatest presidents come from the ranks of industry and commerce?

Not by any means.

Of the three presidents generally ranked the greatest—George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Franklin D. Roosevelt—only Washington had real business experience, and that was as an 18th century plantation owner. (Lincoln ran a modest law practice in Illinois but, as Clint Eastwood said at the convention, lawyers don't count.)

And more recently? A 2009 survey of historians conducted by C-SPAN identified the best presidents since World War II as Ronald Reagan, an actor and union leader; Dwight D. Eisenhower, a career Army officer; Harry S. Truman, a failed haberdasher; and John F. Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson and Bill Clinton, all career politicians.

Several presidents with business experience have been elected since World War II, but none is counted among the greats. George H.W. Bush started an oil drilling firm in Texas, but most of his career was as a politician and diplomat. George W. Bush followed in his father's footsteps but less successfully; when he ran for president, he touted his achievements as governor of Texas, not as an oilman or baseball executive. The first Bush presidency ended after one term, the second in a financial collapse.

There was also Jimmy Carter, who, like Romney, was a governor and Washington outsider who pointed with pride to his management experience—in Carter's case, as a peanut farmer. But it's safe to say that Carter isn't the model Romney's thinking of.

Other businessmen have run for president and failed. H. Ross Perot ran as a third-party candidate in 1992 and 1996. Herman Cain of Godfather's Pizza made a brief run for the Republican nomination this year. Donald Trump threatened to run but opted to back Romney instead.

In fact, the list of successful businessmen who became great politicians is surprisingly short.

Why? In part because running a successful business and a successful public administration (or even a successful electoral campaign) don't have all that much in common. As long ago as 1979, Harvard scholar Graham Allison compared the demands of private enterprise and public administration and concluded that they were alike only "in all unimportant respects."

"The differences are more important than the similarities," Allison wrote.

Among the differences: Businessmen have clear, measurable goals (mainly increasing profits); political leaders' aims are less precise (except for winning the next election).

Entrepreneurs can constantly revamp their companies to adjust to the changing environment; political leaders are stuck running government institutions that resist structural change.

By DOYLE MCMANUS
Los Angeles Times

Doyle McManus is a columnist for The Los Angeles Times. Readers may send him e-mail at doyle.mcmanus@latimes.com.

"In business," former Secretary of State George P. Shultz told me long ago, "you have to be careful when you tell someone working for you to do something because he'll actually go out and do it. In government, you don't have to worry about that."

And while businessmen work in a competitive marketplace, they normally don't have to negotiate budget deals with an opposition that's constantly trying to discredit whatever they do.

It's "like being the quarterback of a team chosen by your opponents," one successful businessman turned politician complained in 1964. That was Michigan Gov. George W. Romney, the current candidate's father.

So while the younger Romney certainly had success in building Bain Capital, a hedge fund that invested in troubled companies and start-ups, that by no means guarantees that a Romney presidency would be a triumph—or even that he will be elected.

Until now, the Romney campaign has had a simple theory of how to win the election—its business plan, if you will. Romney and his strategists assumed that voters' frustration with the slow pace of economic recovery would make them open to the idea of firing Barack Obama as president. That part of the plan was correct.

If Romney ran a steady, unadventurous and error-free campaign, and made sure the voters knew that he was a successful businessman who knew how to turn things around, a majority would naturally end up in his camp, they believed.

Only that hasn't happened. Romney's campaign hasn't been error-free. His most recent stumble, a closed-door speech in which he wrote off 47 percent of the voters as "victims" because of their reliance on government benefits, reflected a peculiar economic determinism; most Republicans know that low-income Americans don't always vote according to that narrow definition of financial interest.

Meanwhile, the Obama campaign spent much of the summer attacking Romney's record as a businessman, telling voters that his career revealed that he was intent on helping the upper class more than the middle class.

"Our failure to respond adequately to those attacks has been the biggest strategic error of this campaign," one Romney activist told me this week.

"I know what it takes to turn around difficult situations," Romney often says, pointing to his record at Bain. He meant it as a qualification for being president, but first he'll have to show how his business acumen can fix a sputtering campaign.

We, the parasites

By JUDY DUGAN
LOS ANGELES TIMES

My husband and I, recently retired, are among the people that Mitt Romney described with such disdain in the fundraiser video revealed Monday. We are dependent on federal and state entitlements.

Romney aimed his scorn at the “47 percent (of Americans) who pay no federal income taxes” and “feel entitled to health care,” among other things.

Our household does not pay zero taxes, but our federal income taxes are a fraction of what we paid as full-time workers. Our Social Security income is untaxed. The substantial value of our Medicare is not subject to taxes. Both of us were helped over rough spots throughout our lives by federal entitlements. Without them, we would not be enjoying a middle-class retirement in our own home, and we are grateful to our country.

As recent retirees, my husband and I depend on Medicare because without it, comparable individual coverage from, say, Blue Cross would at our age cost more than $15,000 a year each. We also depend on the federal mortgage deduction and could not own the house we live in without a state benefit that allowed us to carry our low property tax rate to our current retirement home.

Years ago, as a child of the working class, I got a college education with federally backed student loans and a scholarship. The loan was largely forgiven under another entitlement: a reduction in principal for taking low-paid public service jobs teaching and in the Peace Corps. At times I depended on unemployment insurance, and my husband received federal disability income from Social Security for a few years.

Our work will now be as volunteers, so we are not “job creators” in the eyes of Romney. We have met volunteers from families paying zero income tax because of low income and federal child credits (though the wage earners in those families pay the same rate as Romney on Social Security and Medicare taxes). They give of their time while also striving for better lives.

Finally, my husband and I benefit from one more federal entitlement—except it’s not aimed at the elderly or the struggling. It’s the 15 percent federal tax cap on capital gains.

For us, such investment gains are a tiny fraction of our income. But they are virtually all the income of billionaire hedge fund managers. Multimillionaires like Romney who live almost entirely off their stock and bond portfolios are also top beneficiaries.

A decade ago, investors paid at the personal income rate—up to 35 percent or more—on their realized investment gains. Congress and the George W. Bush administration capped most such gains at the rate at 15 percent in 2003. Loath to be seen “increasing” taxes, Congress keeps renewing the cap. And it is an entitlement just as much as food stamps, income tax credits for families with children, and Medicaid. It is paid for by all taxpayers for the benefit of some. Except, of course, that in the case of capital gains, the benefit increases with wealth and will increase even more if Romney is elected and gets his way.

He, running mate Paul Ryan and other conservatives would like to steeply cap, cut or cap and privatize entitlements. Medicare, in one of their schemes, would ultimately become a voucher system for the benefit of for-profit companies. Only one entitlement, the capital gains tax cap, would be vastly expanded; Romney proposes to cut the gains tax from 15 percent to 0 percent for some taxpayers. Ryan would like to do away with the tax altogether. A separate proposal could eliminate corporate dividend taxes.

Thus Americans who in Romney’s view “believe the government has a responsibility to them, who believe they are victims, who believe they are entitled to health care, to food, to housing” would help fund the yachts of billionaires through reductions in their food stamps or child care credits. Others of us might pay for their luxuries through limits on and fees for our Medicare and perhaps taxes on our Social Security.

Depending on which capital gains tax plan came to pass, Romney could personally benefit by millions a year—a windfall he would no doubt feel eminently entitled to. Maybe he’d use it to create jobs for us as his elderly maid and butler.

The fact-checkers need some checking, too

By CATHY YOUNG
NEWSDAY

The fact-checkers need some checking, too

Fact-checking the statements of politicians, a growing trend in recent years, has been especially visible in this year’s presidential campaign, thanks to the likes of Politifact.com, Factcheck.org and fact-checkers in the mainstream media as well.

Democrats have latched on to fact-checkers’ reports labeling Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan serial liars. Republicans have claimed the supposedly independent fact-checkers are liberal journalists in bed with the Democrats. Is such fact-checking a legitimate enterprise, or an attempt to hide bias behind a neutral facade? Who will fact-check the fact-checkers?

Take one widely ridiculed Ryan “lie”: the claim that President Barack Obama broke a campaign promise to keep a Janesville, Wis., auto plant open if elected. Several fact-checking reports labeled the charge false because it implied that the plant had closed on Obama’s watch; in fact, it ceased production in December 2008—before Obama took office.

Not so fast, said conservative bloggers. Some operations at the plant continued well into 2009. Moreover, the plant is still “on standby” and could be reopened (though its prospects dimmed when General Motors decided to reopen another idled plant, in Tennessee). The Janesville plant was already slated for shutdown in February 2008 when then-candidate Obama chose it as the location for a major speech and said, “I believe that if our government is there to support you ... this plant will be here for another hundred years.” A few months later he reiterated that, as president, he would “lead an effort to retool plants like the GM facility in Janesville.”

Of course Obama made no guarantee to keep the plant open. But Ryan’s basic point—that Obama made a lot of grand promises on which he did not deliver—stands.

For a much more complex fact-checking debate, there’s the question of whether the Obama administration has, as Romney charges, sought to “gut” the work requirement for welfare recipients that was central to President Bill Clinton’s 1996 welfare reform. Democrats dismiss this claim as “thoroughly debunked”: according to fact-checkers at Politifact, CNN.com and other venues, the Obama administration has merely agreed to grant waivers at the request of states—some led by Republican governors—and only if the states can demonstrate that their proposals can ultimately move more people into jobs.

But some experts—not only Robert Rector of the conservative Heritage Foundation, but also maverick Democrat Mickey Kaus—have ventured to rebut the rebuttal. They argue that the waivers come with such flexible standards they could make the work requirement meaningless. Even Ron Haskins, an analyst with the Brookings Institution, who supports the waivers, thinks they represent a major enough change to the 1996 law to need congressional approval.

Especially on complex policy issues, facts are rarely just facts. Is Obama’s health care law a “government takeover” of health care, or merely an expansion of government’s role? Would Ryan’s Medicare reform plan represent the “end” of Medicare, or merely an overhaul? Is rhetorical exaggeration a lie? Is an out-of-context statement false?

Not all questionable fact-checks are slanted left. Factcheck.org brands as a falsehood the Obama camp’s claim that the Republican Party platform would ban abortion even in cases of rape and incest: the platform simply doesn’t mention these exemptions. Yet, since it states that “the unborn child has a fundamental individual right to life,” is it illogical to conclude that this right would apply to unborn children conceived through rape?

Liberal bias or no, it’s always a slippery slope from fact-checking to fact interpretation and labeling dissenting analysis a lie. What should pundits do? Either offer clearly labeled opinions, or present the facts as thoroughly as they can and leave readers to draw conclusions.

The fall’s must-read political book

By WILLIAM MCKENZIE
THE DALLAS MORNING NEWS

If you can read only one political book this fall, pick up Mickey Edwards’ “The Parties Versus the People: How to Turn Republicans and Democrats Into Americans.” His ideas offer a reassuring way forward, assuming you think both major parties should move past their tribal rivalries. You especially should read the former congressman’s new book if you think neither party has a monopoly on truth. And, if you are a die-hard partisan, man, you really should read it.

Edwards served 16 years as a GOP House member from Oklahoma. He became his party’s fourth-ranking House member in the 1990s. And he chaired the American Conservative Union.

These credentials mean that he’s no outsider throwing stones over the village gate. Edwards has been in the system, believes in two-party government—but thinks it’s not serving Americans well.

He contends—rightly—that the major parties are the problem. Here’s how Edwards, now with the Aspen Institute in Washington, summarizes his thesis:

“My purpose is not to silence partisan voices, but rather to take away the parties’ ability to silence the voices of those who are not the choice of party insiders.”

The control starts with the choices that voters get served on Election Day. Just look at the choices coming up this year: Congressional incumbents largely are running in safe House districts. If the seat’s open, competitors often represent their party’s dominant wing.

Exceptions exist. But loyalists usually win nomination races, thanks to primaries that reward the faithful. Voters in November rarely get a choice between candidates who know they must win votes from the other party or from independents.

As Edwards writes, the lack of options is jarring compared to the rest of American life, where we have alternatives in everything from soaps to phones to colleges. Oddly, when it comes to representative government, we get little choice.

Edwards offers several remedies, the most intriguing being an open-primary system. After long battling party insiders, California reformers succeeded this year in getting their state to hold one big open primary.

Candidates from both parties competed in the same contest. The top two finishers, regardless of their party affiliation, are headed to the general election.

We need to see how well this works. But, as Edwards explains, it does take away the parties’ ability to control access to the ballot.

Of course, once a candidate gets to Congress, he or she still must face the powerful grip of party bosses. Edwards draws upon his knowledge of Congress to suggest how to remake its culture.

This part of his book is like reading a baseball veteran’s insights into how a team can change its play on the field. We could get more government leaders, instead of party leaders, with these two changes:

First, require that the speaker of the House win at least 60 percent of the chamber’s votes. The bipartisan No Labels group has embraced this concept. And Edwards argues this would force speaker candidates to listen to more than the majority of the majority.

That’s what happened in Texas when GOP Speaker Joe Straus needed Democratic votes to first get his post. In his initial session as head of the Texas House, he had to heed more than his party’s majority.

Second, the House Rules Committee should have an equal number of Republicans and Democrats. This insider panel matters because it decides which bills and amendments the full House debates.

Not surprisingly, the party controlling the House has the most members, all of them loyalists. Edwards proposes equal numbers from both parties so neither side gags the other’s measures.

The House won’t make that change on its own, so it’s up to us as Americans to press for it. Perhaps then we could get partisans acting more like Americans. It’s our democracy, so let’s get moving.

Western North Pacific between equator and 25N from 130E to 180.

Tropical Depression 18W is centered northwest of Yap at 14N132E. Scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms are present near the center between 11N and 16N from 130E to 134E. For more information on Tropical Depression 18W, see bulletins issued by the Joint Typhoon Warning Center under WMO header WTPN31 PGTW and Public Advisory issued by National Weather Service forecast office Guam under WMO header WTPQ31 PGUM. A monsoon trough extends eastward from 13N130E through Tropical Depression 18W at 14N132E to another weak circulation centered at 9N143E then continues southeastward to end south of Pohnpei at EQ157E. Convergent west winds south of the trough are generating scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms south of Koror and Yap south of a line from 3N134E to 6N142E to 4N147E. Scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms are occurring along the trough west of the Mariana Islands to west of Chuuk or within 70 miles of a line from 17N133E to 15N139E to 8N147E and south of Chuuk within 80 miles of a line from 7N151E to EQ153E. An upper-level trough curves southeastward from 25N140E through a low centered at 18N153E then continues northeastward through another low centered northeast of Wake Island at 23N162E to beyond 25N at 163E. Scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms are found across the Mariana Islands within 50 miles of a line from 15N141E to 14N151E and north of Chuuk and Pohnpei to near Wake Island within 300 miles of a line from 10N151E to 18N162E to 22N170E. A surface trough stretches eastward from 1N167E to south of Majuro to beyond the date line at 8N. Scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms are found from Kosrae to near Majuro and Butaritari south of a line from 7N162E to 7N170E to 9N180.

A LOOK BACK AT PAST YEARS' HEADLINES

Sept. 22, 1999

Scholarship program gets $1 million
Legislators will boost funding for the government scholarship program by about $1 million to try to deal with anticipated deficit that threatens to cut substantial financial assistance to off-island students as well as those attending the Northern Marianas College. Members of the House Ways and Means have decided to slash proposed appropriation for the purchase of new computer hardware to realign funds to the Scholarship's Office, according to its chair Rep. Karl T. Reyes. He said the committee has identified these money as possible source for much-needed funding for financial aid provided to local students, adding that at least a million dollars is expected to be generated from such move.

Inos' expending power over CIP funds OK'd
Acting Gov. Jesus R. Sablan signed new three laws yesterday, including a measure granting expenditure authority to Commissioner of Education, Rita H. Inos, over close to $30 million in fresh funding for capital improvement projects of the Public School System. The two other laws, meanwhile, amend the statute that created the Board of Professional Licensing as well as the Fire Safety Code which the Legislature enacted recently. In Public Law 11-100 concerning the PSS funds, Sablan said giving spending power to Inos would avoid jeopardizing construction of the infrastructure projects that were part of an initial appropriation bill he approved last month.

Airport revenues soar 11 percent
Deployment by Mandarin Airlines of nonstop flights from Taipei to Saipan pushed Commonwealth Ports Authority's revenues by 11 percent in August to over $950,000 from $865,000 posted during the same period last year. Mandarin Air's twice-per-week flights to Saipan also salvaged the otherwise negative growth in aircraft landing at the Saipan International Airport, according to a financial report prepared by CPA comptroller Dave S. Demapan. Aircraft landing at the Saipan air transport facility registered a single-digit growth despite the 17-percent reduction in Continental Micronesia flight services to the island, thanks to the 56 percent increase posted by Seoul-based carrier, Asiana Airlines. Mr. Demapan reported that total number of Northern Marianas-bound passengers during the same month jumped 19 percent with all CNMI signatory carriers, except for Japan Airlines.

PSS to institute after-school learning program
The Public School System has disclosed plans to institute an after-school learning program where students at the higher grade levels will be tapped to conduct a few hours of tutoring to younger students. Through a U.S. AmeriCorps grant, PSS is planning to establish the program by December of this year using public school campuses as community learning centers. According to Education Commissioner Rita H. Inos, although PSS has the responsibility to educate all students in the CNMI, much of the school system's effort is also designed to assist students who need the greatest help to reach minimum academic standards.

NMC eyed as region's hub of Internet-based learning
The Northern Marianas College is being eyed to become a regional provider of web-based conferencing and distance learning under the CNMI's Workforce Management Improvement Plan. The WMIP, which the Babauta administration has began implementing this year, says that the distance learning program will be handled by the NMC's School of Education. The NMC said it has obtained significant funding for this important technology. From its current grants, the NMC plans to contribute some $120,000 for the hardware/infrastructure, support for a new server, upgraded Internet capability and technical assistants for content development.

House panel supports Rota homestead developments
A Senate initiative seeking to identify two Rota public land areas as future sites for village homestead developments gained approval from the House Committee on Natural Resources. The committee, in a report, stated that Senate Bill 13-32's intent would benefit many Rota residents, especially those with pending homestead applications. The proposed measure seeks to reserve areas of public lands on Rota, particularly the Finafa and Ginalangan areas, for the purpose of developing village homesteads.

PH Comelec team in NMI eyed for 2013 election

By CLARISSA V. DAVID
clarissa_david@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The Philippine Consulate General in Agaña is looking at requesting the Philippine Commission on Elections to send a team to conduct overseas absentee voting in the CNMI, allowing registered Filipino voters to cast their ballots in person for the 2013 election.

"If possible, we will request them to fly out here and provide us assistance during the voting process," Guam Consul General Bayani V. Mangibin said during a recent visit to Saipan.

Mangibin flew to the Northern Marianas capital with Consul Gary Auxilian on Sept. 10 for a five-day visit in preparation for taking over the consular responsibilities of the Saipan consulate after its last day on Oct. 31.

The Philippine Consulate General on Saipan will shut down as part of a wider effort to consolidate foreign service posts in the Pacific.

The Guam consulate's request is part of its two-tiered plan to encourage registered Filipino voters in the Commonwealth to exercise their right to elect the nation's succeeding leaders.

The other part of the plan, Mangibin said, is for the Guam consulate to send their team of representatives to conduct the overseas absentee voting on Saipan.

"Should the Comelec team not arrive, we will be here definitely. That's our obligation, so we will be here," he told reporters at a news briefing hosted by the Saipan consulate.

Mangibin noted the need to have the registered overseas absentee voters personally appear at a designated polling precinct in hopes to keep the same turnout as that of the May 2010 national elections.

The Saipan consulate posted a record of 7,169 registered absentee voters in the last election, the second highest among Philippine consulates across the U.S. and 10th from all over the world. Of this number, 46.6 percent or 3,341 actually voted.

"We really want to maintain that kind of accomplishment," added Mangibin.

He reminded Filipinos in the CNMI to register for the overseas absentee voting for the May 2013 election.

The deadline for the registration and certification process is on Oct. 31, a Wednesday, which coincides with the Saipan consulate's closure, he added.

Saipan Consul General Medardo G. Macaraig earlier said that they expect a lower registration turnout for this election due to the decline in the Filipino population in the Commonwealth, attributed mainly to the federalization of the CNMI's immigration system and continued economic downturn on the islands.

Consulate, POLO/OWWA to auction office property

By CLARISSA V. DAVID
REPORTER

The Philippine Consulate General and the Philippine Overseas Labor Office/Overseas Workers Welfare Administration separately announced that they will auction their office properties and equipment in preparation for the closure of their offices on Saipan.

In an invitation to bid issued on Sept. 11, both the Consulate and the POLO/OWWA invited interested parties to submit sealed bids for these assets on an "as is, where is" basis. Items include office furniture and fixtures, computers, and printers, and several home appliances.

The consulate's assets are open for inspection from 5pm to 6pm until Oct. 15. The Consulate's Disposal Committee Secretariat will accept sealed bids until Oct. 16.

"No late submissions shall be accepted and all sealed bids shall be immediately opened after the deadline for submission," Consul General Medardo G. Macaraig said in the invitation.

The winning bidder will be notified on or before Oct. 25 and can take possession of the property or equipment from Nov. 1 to 15 at 3pm, except on weekends and holidays.

Meanwhile, POLO/OWWA items may be inspected until Oct. 4 from 4pm to 6pm. Sealed bids will be accepted until Oct. 4, and the winning bidder will be notified on or before Oct. 8.

Both offices reserve the right to reject any or all bids.

Macaraig said yesterday that the rest of the Saipan consulate property will be turned over to the Guam Consulate for their use. These include consular vehicles, computers, and machines for ePassport and the overseas absentee voting.

At least one interested party has already submitted a sealed bid to the Saipan consulate while several have done so at the POLO office, disclosed Macaraig and officer-in-charge Julia F. Fabian, respectively.

For more information, call the Consulate Disposal Committee Secretariat at 234-1848 or 1850 and look for property officer Liza Dean. For POLO/OWWA, call 235-3411.

Uptick noted in number of PH passport renewals

By CLARISSA V. DAVID
clarissa_david@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The impending closure of the Philippine Consulate General on Saipan has resulted in the influx of Filipinos availing of consular services in the last few weeks, particularly passport renewal applications.

Consul General Medardo G. Macaraig disclosed in an interview yesterday that passport renewal applications jumped to 40 a day—a 400 percent-increase from their usual daily average of only 10 clients.

Many of the applicants, Macaraig noted, have passports that will not expire until 2013 and 2014.

"With our last day scheduled on Oct. 31, a lot of Filipinos on island are now opting to renew their passports even if they have yet to expire," he told Saipan Tribune.

The consulate has waived the "formalities" of passport renewal, allowing passport holders whose expiration date for their documents is more than the required six months "in the interest of Filipinos here in the Northern Marianas," said Guam Consul General Bayani V. Mangibin.

Macaraig pointed out that only a handful of the passport renewal applicants have documents expiring within the year. He said these applicants maintain that they do not travel and do not have a reason to renew their travel documents.

Besides passport renewal, many of the Saipan consulate's clients of late apply for other consular documents such as report of birth or dual citizenship, said Macaraig.

He urged Filipinos in the Commonwealth to visit the consulate for their consular needs until Oct. 31, its last day of service to the public.

Macaraig, who is scheduled to leave today for a weeklong stay in Manila, said several of their employees are already scheduled to leave before the consulate's last day.

At least three staffers will leave by Oct. 12 to go to their next assignments in Doha, Qatar; Jeddah, Saudi Arabia; and Tel Aviv, Israel.

"They would have to leave earlier as they need several days to work on their visa requirements for their next consular assignment," said Macaraig, who has been assigned to serve at the Philippine Embassy in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

Macaraig said he will return to Saipan on Oct. 1 and meet with Guam Consul Gary Auxilian to finalize the transfer of responsibilities of the Saipan consulate to their counterparts in Guam.

Only two staffers will remain at the Saipan consulate to wrap up any administrative matters or concerns.

Macaraig said he already hosted a modest gathering for Filipino community leaders last Sept. 11 after the leaders' meeting with Auxilian and Mangibin to mark his Oct. 15 departure.

He also expects to make final conference calls and meetings with island leaders before leaving for Malaysia.

Little Ms. PH-CNMI 2012 to be crowned tonight

By CLARISSA V. DAVID
clarissa_david@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

After years of hiatus, the Little Miss Philippines-CNMI pageant returns this year with 16 young girls vying for the title and tiara at 7pm tonight at the Pedro P. Tenorio Multi-Purpose Center in Susupe.

Presented by Saipan Music & Dance Studio, the pageant will feature 4- to 8-year-old girls competing in the national costumes, talent, and evening gown categories, organizer and choreographer Joel Vallega said yesterday.

Of the 16 aspirants, only six finalists will be selected to move on to the interview portion where a panel of six judges, composed of adult pageant winners and other community members, will ask them some questions.

The judges will then decide who will win the Little Miss Philippines-CNMI 2012 crown and receive the $300 cash prize. The first runner up will take home $200 while the second runner up gets $100. The third, fourth, and fifth runners up will receive phones from Docomo Pacific.

All winners will be presented with a crown, sash, and bouquets of flowers.

Vallega said this will be his first time to put together this pageant, which promises several production numbers by the contestants, most of whom are apprentices at the Saipan Music & Dance Studio.

He spoke well of the candidates, saying that they worked hard to give the audiences a fantastic and exciting show.

Vallega is assisted by veteran choreographer and event organizer Ernie Molina, who serves as the pageant adviser.

In an interview, Molina said that the Little Miss Philippines-CNMI pageant is designed to promote personal development in these young lasses by honing their talents, helping them overcome shyness, and providing them with ample community exposure.

All 300 tickets to the Little Miss Philippines-CNMI 2012 event are sold out, but Vallega said that tickets will still be sold at the gate for $7 each.

For more information, call Vallega at 898-1721.

AP Exclusive: Unique tombs found in the Philippines

By JIM GOMEZ
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—Archaeologists have unearthed remnants of what they believe is a 1,000-year-old village on a jungle-covered mountaintop in the Philippines with limestone coffins of a type never before found in this Southeast Asian nation, officials said Thursday.

National Museum official Eusebio Dizon said the village on Mount Kamhantik, near Mulanay town in Quezon province, could be at least 1,000 years old based on U.S. carbon dating tests done on a human tooth found in one of 15 limestone graves he and other archaeologists have dug out since last year.

The discovery of the rectangular tombs, which were carved into limestone outcrops jutting from the forest ground, is important because it is the first indication that Filipinos at that time practiced a more advanced burial ritual than previously thought and that they used metal tools to carve the coffins.

Past archaeological discoveries have shown Filipinos of that era used wooden coffins in the country's mountainous north and earthen coffins and jars elsewhere, according to Dizon, who has done extensive archaeological work and studies in the Philippines and 27 other countries over the past 35 years.

Aside from the tombs, archaeologists have found thousands of shards of earthen jars, metal objects and bone fragments of humans, monkeys, wild pigs and other animals in the tombs. The limestone outcrops had round holes where wooden posts of houses or sheds may have once stood, Di-zón told The Associated Press in an exclusive interview.

The tombs were similar to ancient sarcophagus, which have become popular tourist attractions in Egypt and Europe, although the ones found in Mulanay were simple box-like limestone coffins without mythological or elaborate human images on the tops and sides.

Archaeologists have only worked on a small portion of a five-hectare (12-acre) forest area, where Mulanay officials said more artifacts and limestone coffins could be buried.

A preliminary National Museum report said its top archaeologists found "a complex archaeological site with both habitation and burial remains from the period of approximately 10th to the 14th century ... the first of its kind in the Philippines having carved limestone tombs."

The discovery has been welcomed with excitement in Mulanay, a sleepy coastal town of 50,000 people in an impoverished mountainous region that until recently was best known as a major battleground between army troops and Marxist rebels.

"Before, if you mention this region, people will say 'Oh, that's NPA country,'" Mulanay Mayor Joselito Ojeda said, referring to the New People's Army rebels. "But that era is past and now we can erase that image and this archaeological site will be a big help."

Mulanay tourism officer Sanny Cortez said that after archaeologists have finished their work in a few years, his town plans to turn Mount Kamhantik's peak into an archaeological and ecotourism park. A museum would also be built nearby.

Despite the loss of thick tree covers in the 1,300-foot

(396-meter) mountain's foothills as villagers clear the jungle for homes and farms, the forested mountain still harbors a rich wildlife, including rare hornbills, wild cats and huge numbers of cave bats, including a white one recently seen by environmental officials. The mountaintop offers a scenic view of Tayabas Bay and the peak of Mayon volcano, famous for its near-perfect cone, Ojeda said.

The archaeological site is part of 280 hectares (692 acres) of forest land that was declared a government-protected area in 1998 to keep away treasure hunters and slash-and-burn farmers. Treasure hunters looking for gold exposed some of the limestone tombs years ago, but it was only last year that Manila-based archaeologists started to unearth the graves and artifacts and realize the significance of the find.

Treasure hunting has damaged many archaeological sites in the country. In the early 1990s, Filipino archaeologists led by Dizon discovered that 2,000-year-old burial jars with unique human face designs had been destroyed by treasure hunters in a cave in Maitum town in southern Sarangani province.

Archaeologists worked for a few years to glue the sack loads of clay shards piece by piece and restored more than 150 ancient burial jars to shape. Some of the Maitum jars are displayed at the National Museum in Manila with a plan to exhibit them in France next year, Dizon said.

PHILIPPINE BRIEFS

Muslim rebels in Philippines kill 3 men in ambush

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—The Philippine military says Muslim militants have ambushed security guards and laborers from a rubber plantation on a volatile southern island, killing three men and wounding six others. The attack Thursday on Basilan Island, the stronghold of al-Qaida-linked Abu Sayyaf militants, is the latest in weeklong assaults against the 1,200-hectare (2,964-acre) plantation despite the military's efforts to protect workers. The government blames the Abu Sayyaf, which is notorious for ransom kidnappings and terrorist attacks over the last two decades. The violence is reportedly rooted in a labor dispute involving the cooperative and dismissed members who are relatives of some of the militant commanders. More than a dozen workers and security guards have been killed in recent months. Military commander Col. Carlito Galvez said Friday that troops are pursuing the attackers.

Philippine police rescue 2 kidnapped Chinese

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—Police say they have rescued two Chinese businessmen in the restive southern Philippines following a gunfight in which a suspected kidnapper was killed and an officer wounded. Police spokesman Martin Gamba says the two traders from Guangxi and a Filipino woman were snatched Saturday from a house in Agusan del Sur province. The woman was released the following day but kidnappers demanded a ransom for Defeng Li and Liguang Yang. Gamba said Tuesday that police were tailing a person who was about to deliver ransom money when two assailants fired at the officers. One suspect was killed, another escaped and the Chinese were safely recovered after Monday's shootout. Ransom kidnappings are common in the volatile south, where Muslim rebels are active.

University of Philippines bans anti-Islam film

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—The state-run University of the Philippines is stopping students from showing an anti-Muslim video that has sparked violent protests around the globe. Friday's planned public screening of the 14-minute "Innocence of Muslims" video was supposed to be part of a course discussing the Bill of Rights and freedom of expression. College of Law Dean Danilo Conception canceled the open forum. Law professor Harry Roque, who teaches the subject, cited security concerns. The film ridicules the Prophet Muhammad and has triggered Muslim protests in many countries, including last week near a university in predominantly-Muslim Marawi city in the southern Philippines. That region has been roiled by a decades-old Muslim rebellion in the mainly Christian Southeast Asian nation.

THE HAGUE (AFP)—A young Filipino who lived off a rubbish dump and slept in an open tomb has won a prestigious children's award in the Netherlands for his work to improve the rights of his fellow street kids.

Cris "Kesz" Valdez, aged 13, was handed this year's International Children's Peace Prize at a glittering ceremony in The Hague on Wednesday, where he received a 100,000 euro ($130,000) prize.

Valdez was chosen from three finalists for the work of his "Championing Community Children" charity, which raises funds to hand out gift parcels to needy children in Cavite City, about 30 kilometers (18 miles) south of the capital Manila.

"You are wonderful," Nobel Peace laureate Desmond Tutu, who handed over this year's prize, told Valdez at a press conference shortly after the ceremony, held in The Hague's historic Knight's Hall.

"My message to children around the world is not to lose hope" and to remember things like hygiene, said Valdez, who added that the prize would help him get an education and perhaps realize his dream of becoming a doctor.

Through his charity, Valdez has handed out more than 5,000 gifts to destitute children that included everyday articles like flip-flops, toys, sweets and clothes, said the KidsRights Foundation, the prize's initiator.

In all, he has helped some 10,000 children in his area on health, hygiene and children's rights, the foundation added.

Some 246,000 street children are, like Valdez was as a young child, subjected to abuse, violence and child labor in the Philippines, it said.

Asked about the prize money, KidsRights Foundation chairman Marc Dullaert said a committee was now to decide, together with Valdez, to which projects it would be donated.

Archbishop Tutu, the South African peace icon who won the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, is in the Netherlands for a nine-day visit.

Census: Economy has bottomed out

WASHINGTON (AP)—More young adults are leaving their parents' homes to take a chance with college or a job. Across the nation, people are on the move again after putting their lives on hold and staying put. Once-sharp declines in births are leveling off, and poverty is slowing.

A new snapshot of census data provides sociological backup for what economic indicators were already suggesting: that the nation is in a tentative, fragile recovery.

"We may be seeing the beginning of the American family's recovery from the Great Recession," said Andrew Cherlin, a professor of sociology and public policy at Johns Hopkins University. He pointed in particular to the upswing in mobility and to young men moving out of their parents' homes, both signs that more young adults were testing out job prospects.

"It could be the modest number of new jobs or simply the belief that the worst is over," Cherlin said.

The new 2011 census figures released Thursday show progress in an economic recovery that technically began in mid-2009. The annual survey, supplemented with unpublished government figures as of March 2012, covers a year in which unemployment fell modestly from 9.6 percent to 8.9 percent.

Not all is well, however. The jobless rate remains high at 8.1 percent. While housing sales have more recently gained, home ownership last year dropped for a fifth straight year to 64.6 percent, the lowest in more than a decade, due to stringent financing rules and a shift to renting. More Americans than ever are turning to food stamps, while residents in housing that is considered "crowded" held steady at 1 percent, tied for the highest since 2003.

Fresh economic data released Thursday added to the mixed picture. The Conference Board's Index of Leading Economic Indicators, designed to forecast future economic activity, dipped 0.1 percent in August after rising 0.5 percent in July and dropping 0.5 percent in June. And the number of Americans seeking unemployment benefits fell only slightly last week.

Taken as a whole, however, analysts say the census data, which track changing patterns in everyday life, provide the latest evidence of a stabilizing U.S. economy. Coming after the devastating housing bust in 2006, such a leveling off would mark an end to the longest and most pernicious economic decline since World War II.

Richard Freeman, an economist at Harvard University, said the data point to a "fragile recovery," with the economy still at risk of falling back into recession, depending in part on who is president and whether Congress averts a "fiscal cliff" of deep government spending cuts and higher taxes in January. "Given the situation in the world economy, we are doing better than many other countries," he said. "Government policies remain critical."

The census figures also show slowing growth in the foreign-born population, which increased to 40.4 million, or 13 percent of the U.S. population.

iPhone 5 launch draws crowds at Asia Apple shops

HONG KONG (AP)—In a now-familiar ritual, Apple's Asian fans jammed the tech juggernaut's shops in Australia, Hong Kong, Japan and Singapore to pick up the latest version of its iPhone.

Eager buyers formed long lines at Apple Inc. stores in Australia and Japan to be the first to get their hands on the latest version of the smartphone. In Hong Kong, buyers had to sign up online for the chance to pick up the device at a preset time. The first customers were greeted by staff cheering, clapping, chanting "iPhone 5! iPhone 5!" and high-fiving them as they were escorted through the front door.

The smartphone is also being launched in the U.S., U.K., Canada, France and Germany on Friday and will go on sale in 22 more countries a week later. The iPhone 5 is thinner, lighter, has a taller screen, faster processor, updated software and can work on faster "fourth generation" mobile networks.

Order numbers indicate the iPhone 5 has overcome initial lukewarm reviews. Apple received 2 million orders in the first 24 hours of announcing its release date, more than twice the number for the iPhone 4S in the same period when that phone launched a year ago.

Analysts have estimated Apple will ship as many as 10 million of the new iPhones by the end of September.

Some Australian fans went to extreme lengths to be the first to own the new phone, grabbing the first spots in line at Apple's flagship store in downtown Sydney on Tuesday—three days ahead of the release.

Todd Foot, 24, nabbed the coveted first spot and spent an average of 18 hours a day sitting in a folding chair adorned with an Australian flag, and attempting to catch a few hours' sleep each night in a tent on the sidewalk outside the store.

Foot's dedication was largely a marketing stunt, however. He writes product reviews for a technology website which plans to give away the phone after Foot reviews it.

In Hong Kong, not everyone who lined up was an Apple enthusiast. University student Kevin Wong, waiting to buy a black 16 gigabyte model for 5,588 Hong Kong dollars ($720), said he was getting one "for the cash." He planned to immediately resell it to one of the numerous grey market retailers catering to visiting mainland Chinese buyers. China is one of Apple's biggest sources of revenue but a release date for the iPhone 5 has not yet been set.

Mainland Chinese, who like to shop in Hong Kong because there's no sales tax and because of the strength of the yuan, will probably buy it from the resellers "at a higher price—a way higher price," said Wong, who hoped to make a profit of HK$1000 ($129).

Business groups protest Calif. carbon market

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP)—A key component of California's landmark greenhouse gas emissions law would impose enormous costs on businesses at a time when the state's economy is sputtering, oil refiners, manufacturers and others said Thursday. Fees from the state's pending cap-and-trade program for carbon emissions amount to a $1 billion-a-year tax increase on about 500 businesses in the state, the California Air Resources Board was told. While the board wasn't voting or taking any significant action regarding cap-and-trade at Thursday's meeting, it was the last chance for businesses to be heard before the program begins. The California Chamber of Commerce and others have written Gov. Jerry Brown urging him to halt the start of the program, which begins in earnest on Nov. 14 and is the central element of California's 2006 climate-change law, AB32.

Chick-fil-A makes another statement on controversy

ATLANTA (AP)—Chick-fil-A is once again in the public relations fryer. The controversy flared up this week when a Chicago politician said the company was no longer giving to groups that oppose same-sex marriage, angering Christian conservatives who supported Chick-fil-A this summer when its president reaffirmed his opposition to gay marriage. Civil rights groups hailed the turnaround, yet the company never confirmed it and instead released two public statements, neither of which made Chick-fil-A's position any clearer. The events suggest the Southern franchise may be trying to steer clear of hot-button social issues while it expands in other, less conservative regions of the country. In its statement Thursday, the Georgia-based company said its corporate giving had for many months been mischaracterized.

'Extremists used video as excuse'

MIAMI (AP)—President Barack Obama said Thursday that extremists used an anti-Islam video as an excuse to assault U.S. interests overseas, including an attack on the U.S. Consulate in Libya that killed the U.S. ambassador and three other Americans.

The president's comments came as Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton faced questions from members of the House and Senate about the Sept. 11 attack on the consulate in Benghazi in a series of closed-door classified briefings on Capitol Hill. Republicans have accused the Obama administration of misreading the assault as the outgrowth of widespread demonstrations in the Middle East over the video. They insisted it was a terrorist attack, a term White House spokesman Jay Carney used on Thursday. Obama did not use the phrase.

"What we do know is that the natural protests that arose because of the outrage over the video were used as an excuse by extremists to see if they can also directly harm U.S. interests," the president said at a candidate forum on the Spanish-language network Univision.

Asked if that meant al-Qaida, Obama said, "We don't know yet."

"We will focus narrowly and forcefully on groups like al-Qaida, the ones that carried out the 9/11 attacks. Those forces have not gone away," the president said.

Clinton also announced that,

in line with federal law, she will appoint an independent panel to look at circumstances of the attack in Benghazi that killed Ambassador Chris Stevens and three other employees. The so-called Accountability Review Board will be chaired by retired diplomat Thomas Pickering, she said.

Democrats and Republicans emerging from the briefings provided some details about what the administration is still piecing together—who was responsible, how much of it was planned and what was the security.

Joining Clinton at the back-to-back briefings were Director of National Intelligence James Clapper and Deputy Defense Secretary Ashton Carter.

Rep. Adam Smith of Washington state, the top Democrat on the House Armed Services Committee, said it was "clearly a terrorist attack," but mortars weren't used until six, seven hours into the fight.

"So it seemed like an armed gang that seized an opportunity," Smith said.

Both Smith and Rep. C.A. Dutch Ruppersburger of Maryland, the top Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, said there was no evidence to suggest that the local Libyans at the consulate colluded with the attackers.

Obama suggests Romney is out of touch with America

MIAMI (AP)—President Barack Obama cast Mitt Romney on Thursday as an out-of-touch challenger for the White House and an advocate of education cuts that could cause teacher strikes to spread from Chicago to other cities. The Republican countered that the U.S. economy "is bumping along the bottom" under the current administration and he predicted victory in the fall.

The two men eyed each other across hotly contested Florida, a state with 29 electoral votes, more than any other battleground in the close race for the White House.

"When you express an attitude that half the country considers itself victims, that somehow they want to be dependent on government, my thinking is maybe you haven't gotten around a lot," the president said. That was in response to a question about Romney's recent observation that 47 percent of Americans pay no income tax and believe they are victims and entitled to an array of federal benefits.

Obama spoke at a town hall-style forum aired by the Spanish-language television network Univision.

For his part, Romney was eager to move past that controversy, which has knocked him off stride. He disclosed plans for a three-day bus tour early next week through Ohio with running mate Paul Ryan and sought to return the campaign focus to the economic issues that have dominated the race all year.

At a fundraiser in Sarasota, Fla., Romney looked ahead to his televised head-to-head encounters with Obama this fall. "He's a very eloquent speaker, and so I'm sure in the debates, as last time ... he'll be very eloquent in describing his vision," the Republican said. "But he can't win by his words, because his record speaks so loudly in our ears. What he has done in the last four years is establish an economy that's bumping along the bottom."

Less than seven weeks before Election Day, polls make the race a close one, likely to be settled in eight or so swing states where neither man has a solid edge. Obama has gained ground in polls in some of those states since the completion of the Democratic National Convention two weeks ago, while Romney has struggled with controversies of his own making that have left Republicans frustrated at his performance as a candidate.

Still, there were fresh signs of weakness in the nation's job market as the two candidates vied for support in Florida.

The Labor Department said the number of Americans seeking unemployment fell only slightly last week, to a seasonally adjusted level of 382,000, suggesting that businesses remain reluctant to add to their payrolls. The four-week average rose for the fifth straight week to the highest level in nearly three months.

After more than two days of struggle, Romney seemed eager to leave the 47 percent controversy behind as he appeared at the Univision forum Wednesday night. "My campaign is about the 100 percent in America," he said firmly.

US surge troops out of Afghanistan

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP)—Nearly two years after President Barack Obama ordered 33,000 more U.S. troops to Afghanistan to tamp down the escalating Taliban violence, the last of those surge troops have left the country, U.S. Defense Secretary Leon Panetta said Friday.

Panetta said the “surge did accomplish its objectives of reversing the Taliban momentum on the battlefield and dramatically increase the size and capability of the Afghan national security forces.”

Calling it a “very important milestone,” Panetta said he believes the U.S. is on track to accomplish its goals in Afghanistan.

Panetta said the top U.S. commander in Afghanistan, Gen. John Allen, “is saying that the force he has put in place is sufficient to accomplish that mission.”

The withdrawal, which leaves 68,000 American forces in the war zone, comes as the security transition to Afghan forces is in trouble, threatened by a spike in so-called insider attacks in which Afghan Army and police troops, or insurgents dressed in their uniforms, have been attacking and killing U.S. and NATO forces.

And it’s called into question the core strategy that relies on NATO troops working shoulder to shoulder with Afghans, training them to take over the security of their own country so the U.S. and its allies can leave at the end of 2014 as planned.

The number of U.S. forces there peaked at about 101,000 last year, and they have been coming out slowly over the past several months.

The surge was aimed at beating back the Taliban to give the Afghan government and its security forces the time and space to take hold. The key goal was to ensure that the Taliban did not regain a foothold in the country that could allow it once again to become a safe haven for terror groups. And there was hope that Taliban members would be willing to come to the peace table.

Military commanders say they have made broad gains against the Taliban, wresting control of areas where the insurgents once had strong footholds. And Panetta has characterized the insider attacks as the last

US to reinstate NZ military ship visits

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP)—After a 25-year ban, America will begin allowing Royal New Zealand Navy ships to visit U.S. military and Coast Guard facilities around the world, U.S. Defense Secretary Leon Panetta said Friday.

He said a policy change will allow the defense secretary to authorize individual visits. He said the U.S. also was removing restrictions to make it easier for the two militaries to engage in exercises and for leaders to hold security discussions as the U.S. refocuses attention on the Asia-Pacific region.

“While we acknowledge that our countries continue to have differences of opinion in some limited areas, today we have affirmed that we are embarking on a new course in our relationship that will not let those differences stand in the way of greater engagement on security issues,” Panetta said.

He spoke during a news conference Friday at the Government House with New Zealand Defense Minister Jonathan Coleman.

New Zealand banned nuclear weapons from the country 25 years ago so U.S. warships have not been able to enter its ports, and New Zealand ships were not allowed in U.S. military or Coast Guard ports.

The New Zealand minister, however, said his country’s ban on nuclear warships will continue. But he said the U.S. has accepted that and the two countries have moved on.

Panetta’s visit to New Zealand, the first by a Pentagon chief in 30 years, is part of a U.S. effort to rebuild military ties that were fractured over New Zealand’s ban on nuclear warships.

In recent years the relationship between the two countries has begun to thaw, and in June officials signed a new defense agreement that focuses on building maritime security in the Asia-Pacific region, establishing regular policy dialogue and working together to counter threats.

The relationship between the two countries has improved significantly since New Zealand first sent troops to Afghanistan in 2003, and particularly since the center-right National Party, which is seen as U.S.-friendly, came to power in 2008.

Senior defense officials traveling with Panetta said there were no plans to sign a new defense treaty with New Zealand at this point. Instead, they said leaders wanted to begin moving toward a new defense relationship that would allow greater defense cooperation, including counter-piracy measures, military exercises and training on amphibious ships.

Advancing military ties with New Zealand is part of the U.S. military’s new focus on the Asia Pacific as the Pentagon shifts more troops and ships to the region. The U.S. hopes to work with New Zealand in the South Pacific, where the Wellington government has close ties with other island nations.

Panetta has been on a week-long tour of the Pacific, with earlier stops in China and Japan. But throughout the trip he has insisted that the new pivot to the Pacific is not aimed at containing or threatening China. The U.S., however, has been critical of China’s military buildup and wary as Beijing expands its economic reach and trade through the Pacific.

The officials, who outlined U.S. goals for the visit, spoke on condition of anonymity because the meetings with New Zealand officials had not yet occurred.

Panetta came to thank New Zealand for its participation in the Afghanistan war. New Zealand has about 180 troops there, working as a provincial reconstruction team. So far 10 New Zealand troops have been killed, with five of those deaths occurring in August, including the first female combat casualty in the nation’s history.

gasp of a desperate insurgency.

the impact of the attacks on the troops. Dempsey called them a “very serious threat” to the war campaign and has declared that “something has to change.”

US begins test flights of MV-22 Osprey in Japan

TOKYO (AP)—The U.S. Marines are conducting their first test flights of the MV-22 Osprey aircraft in Japan after months of Flight operations were conducted Friday at a base in southern Japan where they are temporarily deployed before being transferred to Okinawa. Following two recent crashes, tens of thousands of Okinawans have protested the deployment, saying that they are not safe to fly in Okinawa’s crowded environment.

Islam vs tolerance debated in film’s wake

CAIRO (AP)—Behind the anger over a film mocking the Prophet Muhammad, public protest is giving way to measured debate over free speech in the new Muslim world.

But while many crave more openness, few if any will go so far as to say that includes the right to blasphemy.

Angry shouts of “No, no to America!” and “No to Israel!” have been balanced by voices condemning the weeklong violence that has targeted U.S. and other Western embassies and left more than 30 dead in seven countries, including Ambassador Chris Stevens and three other Americans at the U.S. Consulate in Benghazi, Libya.

“Muslims should know that Islamic extremist groups bear some responsibility for the uproar taking place now, and for the collision of the world cultures,” said Sheik Hameed Marouf, a Sunni cleric in Baghdad.

“The moderate people and clerics in the Islamic world should do their best to isolate and stop such groups that do not represent the true moderate values of our religion.”

Syrian activists: Airstrikes kill at least 30

BEIRUT (AP)—Regime airstrikes hit a gas station in northern Syria Thursday, setting off a fiery explosion that killed at least 30 people and wounded dozens, opposition activists said. Amateur video showed thick black smoke engulfing the scene.

Earlier Thursday, a Syrian military helicopter crashed near the capital of Damascus, and Syria’s Information Ministry said the helicopter went down after its rotor accidentally clipped the tail of a Syrian passenger plane with 200 people on board. The larger aircraft landed safely at Damascus International Airport and no one was hurt, the ministry said.

The airstrikes and the close call in the sky underscored the growing turmoil and violence whether Muslim, Jewish or Christian—”will lead only to more killings and more blasphemous acts,” he said.

Anger is still palpable over the anti-Islam video made in California, as well as French political cartoons that denigrate Muhammad, but most of the Arab world has not seen protests for much of this week.

The streets around the U.S. Embassy in Cairo, where clashes raged for days, were relatively quiet Thursday. Egyptian security forces patrolling the area casually leaned their rifles against the same compound walls that were scaled by angry protesters just last week.

The easing of the violence reflects the balance that Egypt and other Islamic nations are trying to find as they work to nourish democracy in societies where blasphemy is a crime.

“There is no doubt that most Muslims take offense at anyone mocking the prophet,” said Mustafa Alani, an analyst at the Geneva-based Gulf Research Center. “The great divide is over the response.

that witnesses counted at least 30 bodies and that dozens of people were wounded. Another group, the Local Coordination Committees, which gathers information from a network of activists across Syria, put the death toll at 55.

Amateur video showed thick black smoke rising near the gas station, which was partially intact. Several vehicles, including a bulldozer and pickup trucks, were on fire. The video, whose authenticity could not be confirmed independently, also showed several damaged cars. A man could be heard shouting “your son is dead.”

Both groups quoted witnesses as saying the blast was caused by airstrikes on the gas station.

Civil war keeps many Syrian children from school

By PAUL SCHEMM and DALE GAVLAK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEL RIFAAT, Syria (AP)—Nine-year-old Rawan Mustafa knew she would miss school this year.

Her primary school is in ruins, blown apart two months ago by an airstrike in rebel-controlled northern Syria.

"I come here to find books to take them home and read—my sister helps me," Rawan said Sunday, picking her way through the rubble of shattered walls, half-burned work books and smashed glass.

Sunday was the official first day of school in Syria, a country of 23 million people, but the country's agonizing civil war is keeping thousands of students like Rawan out of classrooms nationwide.

Many schools have been destroyed or occupied by refugees. Some parents are simply too afraid to send their children to school due over fears of violence. Still others are living in refugee camps outside the country with only limited access to an education.

The U.N. children's agency says it is difficult to know precisely how many Syrian children have been out of school for an extended period due to the conflict, which started 18 months ago and has killed at least 23,000 people.

Dina Craissati, UNICEF's regional education adviser, said at least 200,000 Syrian children who have been displaced from their homes within the country are having difficulty accessing education. Outside Syria's borders, the U.N. has registered more than 250,000 refugees—including children—but tens of thousands more have fled to Jordan, Turkey, Lebanon and Iraq without registering.

Some 2,000 schools have been damaged in the conflict and 759 are being used as sanctuaries for those displaced, Syrian Education Minister Hazwan al-Wazz said. Still, the government says 22,000 schools are operating and handling any overflow by having students attend classes in shifts.

The government said more than 5 million students attended school on Sunday.

Mohammed Rakani, a 10-year-old from the Damascus suburb of Sbeineh, was not among them. He is staying with his family at the Somayya al-Makhzomiya School in Damascus, which is sheltering more 300 people, or 65 families.

"I want to return to my school, which I love so much. I am now in the fourth grade," Mohammed said during a government-escorted trip to the school on Sunday.

In the north, where the opposition wields much more control, rebel officials say they are too focused on getting enough food and medical supplies into the country to concentrate on schools. There are also fears that any makeshift schools set up may attract airstrikes.

"Our main focus is food, shelter and medical care right now," said Seif al-Haq, a rebel with the Tawhid Brigade that is responsible for civilian affairs in the northern city of Aleppo and the surrounding countryside.

"No schools are running in the liberated areas

Syrian boy Musataf Alhafiz, 11, who fled his home with his family due to fighting between the Syrian army and the rebels, carries his brother Saif, 9 months, while he and others take refuge at the Bab Al-Salameh border crossing, in hopes of entering one of the refugee camps in Turkey, near the Syrian town of Azaz, Thursday, Aug. 23, 2012. Thousands of Syrians who have been displaced by the country's civil war are struggling to find safe shelter while shelling and airstrikes by government forces continue.

of Aleppo, they were all destroyed, but we are trying to run makeshift classes underground, like English or computers. Of course we're still afraid they'll get hit," he said.

Abu Ahmed, a high school physics teacher in Tel Rifaat, said some had contemplated holding private classes but feared they would be hit by the airstrikes that hit the area on a daily basis.

"They target anywhere where people gather," he said, asking his real name not be used because as a civil servant, he is still receiving his government salary.

Another problem is that many teachers have joined the hundreds of thousands of Syrians who have fled the province.

Standing amid the ruins of the school, Mohammed Ibrahim, 13, said his Arabic teacher Abdel-Razaq was his favorite because he never got angry. But Abdel-Razaq was gone now, along with half of Mohammed's friends.

"It makes me sad that they are not here," said Ibrahim, whose favorite subject is math because he said it makes his brain work. "It's boring without them."

Even in villages considered "safe," that aren't subject to daily bombings, schools aren't opening, often because they are filled with refugees.

In the town of Souran, the newly built school is still in perfect condition, but each classroom is now filled with a different extended family who sleep side by side on the floor on thin mattresses.

Refugees from the fighting in Aleppo, they came here months ago and moved all the desks out into the sun-splashed courtyard so that they could settle in the classrooms.

The displaced acknowledged, though, that local residents had been urging them to leave and head for the refugee camps on the border so that the school could return to its original use.

It's not clear why so many schools have been hit in the fighting. In some cases rebels have apparently used the facilities, as may have been the case in Tel Rifaat where one classroom had some tattered military fatigues on the floor.

Residents in Kal Jibreen, however, say that wasn't the case with their school, which on Saturday afternoon was nearly hit by a missile that tore the facade off the house across from it.

A few weeks ago, rockets put a hole in the school roof and smashed most of its windows, according to residents.

"Today we should all be in school, but we can't go because of the planes," said Dargham Yassin, a bespectacled little boy who like many Syrian children looks much younger than his 12 years. Without school, he's not sure how he will fill his days.

"I'll do nothing," he said. "I'll go feed the sheep."

Syrians who have escaped their country also lack access to education.

At the Zaatar refugee camp in Jordan—which is fast becoming known as "the children's camp"—two-thirds of the 30,000 Syrian refugees are under 18, while 5,000 are 4 and younger. On a recent day, the children filled plastic bottles with drinking water at pumps or played on swings and slides; others scampered aimlessly about.

Save the Children and UNICEF believe part of the healing process for the camp's children will mean going back to school.

But Jordanian officials have said that may not happen until October at the earliest, after promised funding is made available by the government of Bahrain. UNICEF wants a school for the camp's children to open much sooner.

"We really need to ensure that children regain some sense of normalcy. They have been through horrific times and have seen extreme violence," said Dominique Hyde, UNICEF's representative to Jordan. "They need as soon as possible not only to come back to education but also to some sort of routine and stability. School provides one of the best ways."

CHICAGO (AP)—American children eat as much salt as adults—about 1,000 milligrams too much, or the same amount as in just one Big Mac. Extra salt is linked with higher blood pressure, even in kids, but government research says those who are overweight and obese may be most vulnerable to its effects.

The new findings from the Centers for Disease Control

CDC: US kids eat too much salt, as much as adults and Prevention were published online Monday in the journal Pediatrics.

Previous research has shown similar results in adults but studies on salt, weight and blood pressure are scarce in children.

The CDC researchers looked at data on 6,200 kids aged 8 to 18 involved in 2003-08 national health surveys. The children were asked twice over several days to detail all foods they'd eaten the previous day; the researchers calculated salt intake from their answers.

Overall, 15 percent had either high blood pressure or slightly elevated blood pressure called prehypertension.

Those who ate the most salt faced double the risk of having elevated blood pressure, compared with those who ate few salty foods. But among overweight or obese kids, the risk was more than triple.

The recommended daily salt or sodium intake for kids and adults is no more than 1 teaspoon daily, or about 2,300 milligrams. On average, study kids ate 3,300 milligrams daily.

CDC researcher Quanhe (SHWAH'-nuh) Yang says it's unclear why heavier kids would be more sensitive to salt but it could be due to obesity-related hormone changes. The results raise concerns because studies have shown that elevated blood pressure in childhood, even just prehypertension, can lead to full-fledged high blood pressure in adulthood and potentially premature heart disease.

Prehypertension and high blood pressure in children younger than 17 depend on age, height and gender.

In those 18 and up, readings between 120 over 80 and 140 over 90 are prehypertension; 140 over 90 and higher is high blood pressure.

Unscrambled they read: A BAD WORD.

OPEN BOOK! Ask someone to open a book to any page and to pick a word within the top nine lines that is not farther in than the ninth word of that line. Now, have the person multiply the page number by 10, add 25, and add the number of the line; then, multiply by 10 again, and add the position number of the word in the line.

Alakazam, subtract 250, and the last digit of answer will be the word's position in line; next-to-last digit will be the line number, and remaining digit or digits the page.

DOTS BEFORE EYES SPAWN FITS

HERE'S a dotty problem if you ever saw one. A ruler and sharp pencil are required to solve it.

This is the test: To draw five straight lines across the diagram (border to border) so that each of the 14 dots is in its own enclosure.

Enclosures may vary in size and shape — some may be large, some small. Indeed, at least two dots are subject to very tight fits.

How long will it take you to draw the lines?

For use as a party pastime, make copies of this diagram and supply each person with ruler and pencil.

See who (if anyone) can answer within five minutes.

Solution: Draw lines 32-11, 2-15, 5-23, 5-13, 10-28. Other answers may be possible.

■ It was Canadian American educator Laurence J. Peter who made the following sage observation: "You can always tell a real friend: When you've made a fool of yourself, he doesn't feel you've done a permanent job."

■ In Murfreesboro, Tenn., it is illegal to keep indoor furniture outdoors.

■ Mike Edwards, one of the founding members of the British band Electric Light Orchestra, met with an untimely death decades after he left the group. In 2010, as Edwards was driving in the rural southwest of England, a farmer lost control of a 1,300-pound bale of hay. This wheel-shaped bale rolled down a hill and over a hedge, and just happened to smash into the van that Edwards was driving.

■ The humble honeybee is the official insect of 17 states.

■ Those who study such things say that there is a 1 million to 1 chance that, within the next century, an asteroid will crash into the Earth and destroy most life on the planet.

■ In 2008 a company called Defense Devices, based in Jackson, Tenn., introduced a new item: a stun gun disguised as a tube of lipstick. The same company offers a ring that will shoot pepper spray.

Pets not immune to gum disease

DEAR PAW'S CORNER: My dog, "Parker," had two teeth removed during his last visit to the veterinarian, who said he had periodontal disease. I always thought that feeding him teeth-cleaning dog treats was enough to keep his teeth healthy, but the veterinarian said no. Can you let your readers know that their pet's teeth need regular brushing and periodic checkups at the vet's office?—Sharon in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

DEAR SHARON: Dogs and cats can get gingivitis, periodontal disease, suffer from tooth loss and be at risk for serious health problems if infections enter the bloodstream.

While treats, chew toys and other products that promote pets' dental health are fine to use, they are not a replacement for brushing—at least once a week—and an annual dental checkup and tooth cleaning.

Purchase a pet-specific toothbrush and toothpaste at the pet store or vet's office. Human toothbrushes and mint-flavored toothpaste will not do. Pet toothbrushes often are shaped to fit over one finger so that you can hold your pet's head still and gently lift his or her lip in order to reach the gums.

Place a small dab of pet toothpaste onto the brush, cradle your pet's head, and lift his or her lip upward (or downward, if brushing the lower teeth). Brush by starting at the gumline and brushing gently down over the teeth (or upward, if brushing the lower teeth). Be patient and give your pet lots of encouragement.

Many pets resist having their teeth brushed, so again, be patient and gentle, and give lots of praise and a treat at the end of each session.

Take hike to enjoy change of seasons

Enjoy the changing of seasons from summer to fall by hiking and walking after school, after work and on Saturday mornings. And do it as a family. When you get moving together, you'll not only feel better, but you'll make special memories as you discover the fascinating world that is in constant motion right out your front door.

Lace up your most comfortable shoes and put an extra kick in your step with these ideas:

Hike for ABCs

Before your first outing, find a medium-size spiral notebook your family can use as a nature journal. Let your kids decorate the cover and mark one letter of the alphabet at the top of every left-hand page. The space leaves two pages for your family to enter sights, sounds and observations you encounter on your walk that start with a specific letter.

You'll soon discover that the ABCs exist just about everywhere.

For example, you might spot a round "O" shaped bird nest tucked in a "Y" shaped tree branch. A cattail in a swamp looks like a dotted "I" and a root protruding through your path might look like a gnarly "D." For a hard-to-find letter, search for it on license plates, ask permission and then help your child make a rubbing, using a piece of paper and a dark crayon.

When you get back home, glue or tape flat finds and sketches to the pages, and compose a poem or a little story about what you saw.

Donna's Day Creative family fun

by Donna Erickson

Park and Walk

A friend once gave me this advice: "When going on an errand, take a child!" So this fall, include your child often when you do Saturday errands to the hardware store, dry cleaners, farmer's market and wherever else your to-do list takes you. These mini "family errand" field trips provide natural opportunities for learning, communicating and sharing about how things work in a community.

If these destinations are near your home, walk there together. If they are far from home, park in a spot farther away from where you are headed. You'll get your extra walking in, avoid congestion and enjoy the benefit of driving out of the lot easily when you leave.

Video shows Lohan-pedestrian encounter at NY club

NEW YORK (AP)—Grainy surveillance footage released Thursday shows Lindsay Lohan's car driving toward a man who says she hit him outside a nightclub and kept going, but the blur used to conceal witnesses' faces partially obscures the scene.

Obamas to make 1st joint appearance on 'The View'

NEW YORK (AP)—President Barack Obama and his wife, Michelle, will make their first joint appearance on the daytime show "The View" next week.

The show says the Democratic president and first lady will tape an episode Monday to air Tuesday. Obama's appearance in July 2010 was the show's most-watched episode ever.

GOP challenger Mitt Romney might not be far behind. Romney said in private remarks to donors made public this week that going on "The View" is high risk because of the sharp-tongued female hosts, only one of whom is a conservative.

That conservative, Elisabeth Hasselbeck, said Wednesday that she had reached out to Romney, and the campaign said he'd love to come on the show in October.

CBS' "60 Minutes" also announced both candidates will appear Sunday in separate interviews.

The 26-year-old actress later was arrested as she left the nightclub at the Dream Hotel in Manhattan's Chelsea neighborhood, police said. No alcohol was involved, they said. Lohan was arrested on charges of leaving the scene of an accident and causing injury. She was given a ticket and was scheduled to appear in court on Oct. 23. Her publicist Steve Honig said he was confident the claims being made against the troubled "Mean Girls" star would be proved untrue.

Lohan

Rodriguez called 911 and was hospitalized with a knee injury. He said he was coming from his job at a restaurant inside the nearby Maritime Hotel when he was struck and was in a lot of pain. He criticized Lohan and her entourage.

"They acted like I was nothing," he told the Daily News. "That no one could touch her because she was so rich and powerful."

Justin Timberlake: I'm not able to rush out albums

LOS ANGELES (AP)—He brought "SexyBack," but don't quite wait for Justin Timberlake to bring his music back—just yet.

The singing superstar said his music making process is fueled by life's experiences and making an album "is a really big deal."

"For me, personally, when I do sit down and decide to do it, it's just a special thing," he said in an interview Wednesday night.

Timberlake is engaged to actress Jessica Biel. He's appeared in a ton of movies in recent years, from "The Social Network" to "Friends With Benefits." This week he's in "Trouble With the Curve," alongside Clint Eastwood and Amy Adams.

His last album was 2006's "FutureSex/LoveSounds," a Grammy-winning record that launched three No. 1 hits and sold more than 4 million units in the United States. He's appeared on songs by other musicians but has not released his own music since.

The 31-year-old said he's unlike today's artists, who constantly drop albums and singles.

"I don't know that I can pump them out every year," he said.

Fiona Apple arrested for hashish in West Texas

EL PASO, Texas (AP)—Singer-songwriter Fiona Apple was arrested for hashish possession at a West Texas Border Patrol checkpoint after a drug-sniffing dog detected marijuana in her tour bus.

Hudspeth County sheriff's office spokesman Rusty Fleming told the Associated Press on Thursday that Apple spent Wednesday night in the county jail in Sierra Blanca. Apple was released Thursday after posting bail.

Country singer Willie Nelson, rapper Snoop Dogg and actor Armand Hammer also have been arrested in Sierra Blanca on marijuana charges.

Fleming said that after the dog alerted the Border Patrol agent, the artist's bus was searched. Police found the drugs in a backpack—about four grams of marijuana and a plastic bag with about four grams of a clay-like substance that tested positive for hashish were stored in a glass container, the sheriff's office said in a press release.

Teens play the same notes, but aren't making music together

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
UNIVERSAL PRESS SYNDICATE

DEAR ABBY: I'm 15 and I really like this boy, but I can't find the courage to ask him out. I'm pretty sure he likes me, too, because whenever we're together he holds my hand or puts his arms around me.

He has a great smile and personality. We have many things in common, such as we both play an instrument, we make each other laugh and we're both close with our families.

What I don't understand is why he hasn't made a move yet to ask me out.

NEEDS LOVE HELP

DEAR NEEDS LOVE HELP: I can think of a few reasons, and none of them have anything to do with how much he likes you. He may not be able to afford to ask you out, he may feel shy, he may not feel ready to date, or his parents may prefer that he concentrate on something other than romance. Some teens get around this by socializing in groups, so instead of asking him "out," consider asking if he'd like to join you and a group of your friends sometime.

DEAR ABBY: I'm an 18-year-old woman who lives at home with my parents. I have been seeing an amazing person for a while now. There is just one problem. My mother has decided to put "rules" on our relationship.

By rules, I mean: a curfew, how often I see him, where I am to be with him and various other things. Also, she randomly blurts out that I am "never to move in with him until I am married." I don't plan on moving in with him until we both have our college degrees.

I am technically an adult, which means to me that I can make my own decisions and suffer the consequences if there are any. I know I live in my parents' home. I follow their rules and respect their wishes—but this is a bit extreme, don't you think?

Abby, please advise me on how to explain to my mom that I'm an adult and not a newborn baby as she regards me?

NOT A CHILD ANYMORE IN OHIO

DEAR NOT A CHILD: Although you may be an adult in the eyes of the law in Ohio, you are not INDEPENDENT. As long as you are dependent upon your parents for shelter, food or anything else there is a price you will have to pay. In this case, the price you are paying is your mother's loving but hawklike supervision. And if you think you or I can talk her out of it, you're dreaming.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I were invited to my brother's wedding, and we accepted. Later, my brother asked me to be a groomsman.

My wife is upset because I didn't ask her if she minded that I'll be in the wedding and I will walk down the aisle with one of the bridesmaids. She feels that my walking with another woman is a "date" and disrespectful to her. Is it proper wedding etiquette to accept an invitation to be in a wedding if you are married?

GROOMSMAN IN THE SOUTH

DEAR GROOMSMAN: It is very common for the brother of the groom to be in his wedding party—and marital status has nothing to do with it. Escorting an assigned bridesmaid to and from the altar is NOT a "date," nor is it disrespectful to your wife, who may really be upset because she wasn't also asked to be part of the wedding party.

Scarlett Johansson to play 'Cat on a Hot Tin Roof'

NEW YORK (AP)—Scarlett Johansson will tap into her feline side later this year when she plays Maggie the Cat on Broadway.

Producers on Thursday unveiled the Tony Award-winning Johansson in a revival of Tennessee Williams' "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof." It will be Johansson's first time back since winning a Tony in the Arthur Miller play "A View from a Bridge" opposite Liev Schreiber in 2010.

Benjamin Walker, who starred in "Bloody Bloody Andrew Jackson," will play her husband Brick, Ciaran Hinds plays Big Daddy, and Debra Monk will be Big Mama. The production will be directed by Tony and Emmy Award-winner Rob Ashford.

Johansson

On the news of the announcement, Johansson said: "I am so thrilled to return to Broadway and feel incredibly fortunate to be doing so with Rob Ashford and such gifted actors."

The new "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" will begin previews at the Richard Rodgers Theater on Dec. 18 and open on Jan. 17. It marks the play's fifth revival on Broadway and one four years after Anika Noni Rose played Maggie.

Johansson's films include "Lost in Translation," "Match Point" and "We Bought a Zoo."

Your progress will be directly linked to how well you utilize your talents in order to gain greater stability. Your numbers are 6, 13, 16, 20, 31, 39, 48.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Engage in something you feel passionate about, and do something that will boost your appeal and your confidence. Shopping will be costly if you are impulsive, but if you shop for a bargain you will find exactly what you want. ***

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Learn from past experience or sign up for a seminar that can enrich your outlook. Don't get angry with someone for not wanting to do things your way. Compromise will help smooth things over and help you find common ground for future projects. *****

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take one step at a time. Don't rush anything or anyone if you want things to turn out well. Too much of anything will lead to trouble. Focus on networking, sharing and finding ways to save money by lowering your overhead. ***

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Focus on what you can accomplish, not on making complaints or being negative. It's important that you show others that you can see the positive in any situation you face. Progressive action will bring stellar results and improve your image and popularity. ***

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your energetic approach can bring about different reactions. Lending a helping hand will bring favorable returns, but using force or anger to get your way will backfire. Diplomacy coupled with a humanitarian attitude will bring good results. Love is highlighted. *****

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Focus on friendship and family ties. Make plans that please others and you will gain approval. Keep life simple and moderate, especially when dealing with emotional or domestic matters. Avoid impulsive purchases or decisions that can lead to a loss. **

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Join in and have some fun. Your outgoing approach to whatever is happening around you will result in added respect and interest in what you are trying to accomplish in other areas of your life. Love is in the stars. *****

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Find a way to lower your overhead. Think outside the box when it comes to your home and what you can live without in order to cut costs. Your effort to save will result in greater freedom. Generosity won't buy love. ***

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't exaggerate or jump to conclusions. You will make wise choices regarding partnerships if you do your homework and check out the authenticity of the people you are dealing with. Love is highlighted. ***

Nationals beat Dodgers to clinch postseason slot

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Washington

Nationals brought postseason baseball back to the nation's capital for the first time since 1933, earning a playoff spot Thursday night with a 4-1 win over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"Nats Clinch" flashed on the scoreboard as Washington ensured at least an NL wild-card spot behind Ross Detwiler's six strong innings and Ryan Zimmerman's RBI double.

A crowd of 30,359 stood and cheered in the ninth inning, then got even louder when Drew Storen struck out Hanley Ramirez to end it. Manager Davey Johnson saluted the fans as he left the field and the team wore caps acknowledging the playoff berth.

Washington's magic number to win the NL East was reduced to eight. The Nationals lead idle Atlanta by 5 1/2 games.

Washington was last in the postseason 79 years ago, when player-manager Joe Cronin and the Senators lost to the New York Giants in five games in the World Series.

The loss dropped the Dodgers three games behind St. Louis for the NL's second wild-card spot. Milwaukee moved ahead of Los Angeles with its win over Pittsburgh.

Detwiler (10-6) allowed just Mark Ellis' fourth-inning home run and two singles. Storen earned his third save.

Chris Capuano (11-11) got the loss.

Reds 5, Cubs 3

In Chicago, the Reds became the first team in the majors to clinch a playoff spot this season, beating the Cubs while manager Dusty Baker remained in a hospital after being diagnosed with an irregular heartbeat.

Ace Johnny Cueto (18-9) and the NL Central leaders ensured themselves of at least a wild-card spot. Cincinnati cut its magic number to two for winning the division for the second time in three years.

The Reds said Baker would remain in a Chicago hospital for an additional day so doctors could monitor his progress. He is hoping to return to Cincinnati on Friday. Bench coach Chris Speier ran the team for a second straight game.

Alfredo Simon got four outs for his first save.

The Reds broke a scoreless tie by getting five straight singles off Manuel Corpas (0-2) in the seventh during a five-run rally capped by Henry Rodriguez's two-run double.

Phillies 16, Mets 1

In New York, Jimmy Rollins and Chase Utley sparked an eight-run first inning. Ryan Howard added a late grand slam and the Phillies routed the inept Mets before a few hundred fans at quiet Citi Field.

Rookie right-hander Tyler Cloyd (2-1) pitched eight innings of three-hit ball and the Phillies stayed four games behind St. Louis for the second NL wild card, with two other teams in their path.

Washington Nationals players high-five as fans celebrate their 4-1 win against the Los Angeles Dodgers to clinch a playoff spot after their baseball game at Nationals Park in Washington, Thursday, Sept. 20, 2012.

Juan Pierre matched a career high with five hits, Utley added four and Philadelphia set season highs for runs and hits (21)—including 19 singles. The Phillies finished a three-game sweep and won for the 11th time in 14 games.

New York rookie starter Jeremy Hefner (2-7) did not record an out in the makeup game for Tuesday night's rainout. With the Mets setting marks for futility at home, it appeared fewer than 1,000 fans were in the stands for the first pitch.

Cardinals 5, Astros 4

In St. Louis, pinch-hitter Carlos Beltran snapped a sixth-inning tie with a two-run double and Allen Craig hit a three-run homer, powering the Cardinals to a season sweep at home against the Astros.

Beltran's double put St. Louis up 5-3, rewarding Jaime Garcia (5-7) for keeping it close and leaving the Cardinals 2 1/2 games up for the second NL wild card with 12 games remaining. They took care of business against the lowly Astros, who absorbed their 102nd loss while leading for a single inning in the three-game series.

The Cardinals were 6-0 at home against Houston, their first season series sweep in St. Louis since 1996.

Bud Norris (5-13) allowed five runs in 5 1-3 innings for Houston after getting sent back to the team hotel Wednesday night suffering from flu-like symptoms.

Jason Motte finished for his 38th save in 45 chances.

Brewers 9, Pirates 7

In Pittsburgh, Rickie Weeks hit a tying two-run triple and scored the go-ahead run on Aramis Ramirez's single, helping surging Milwaukee rally for the victory.

The Brewers have won five straight, eight of nine and 15 of 19 to climb into the playoff race. They remained 2 1/2 games back of St. Louis for the second NL wild-card slot.

Milwaukee trailed 7-4 before it rallied for four runs in the eighth inning.

Ramirez had three hits and three RBIs for the Brewers, who built an early 4-0 lead.

Pittsburgh star Andrew McCutchen hit a three-run drive for his 30th homer. Chris Resop (1-4) got the loss.

The Pirates (74-75) have dropped three straight and 11 of 13 to slip under .500 for the first time since late May. They are in danger of a 20th straight losing season, which would extend their major North American professional sports record.

Manny Parra (2-3) picked up the win and John Axford worked the ninth for his 31st save in 39 chances.

Giants 9, Rockies 2

In San Francisco, Pablo Sandoval homered from both sides of the plate and the NL West-leading Giants reduced their magic number to clinch the division to four.

Buster Posey also connected to back another strong start by Barry Zito (13-8) as San Francisco completed a four-game series sweep.

Zito won his fifth straight decision and has done everything he can to earn himself a spot in the postseason rotation after being left off all three rounds for the 2010 World Series champions.

The second-place Dodgers were set for a night game at Washington, trailing by 9 1/2 games. San Francisco (87-63) moved a season-best 24 games above .500.

Colorado has lost six in a row. Jorge De La Rosa (0-1) was tagged for five earned runs, six in all, and seven hits in 3 2-3 innings.

Padres 6, Diamondbacks 5

In Phoenix, Jesus Guzman homered to help San Diego get the victory.

Clayton Richard (14-12) allowed four runs and eight hits in six innings to raise his career record against Arizona to 6-0—including three wins in three starts at Chase Field over the past 10 weeks.

Anthony Bass, the last of five Padres pitchers in the ninth, struck out Aaron Hill on a checked swing for his first career save.

Adam Eaton hit his first career home run and Hill also went deep for the Diamondbacks, who had won three in a row. Justin Upton had three hits and scored twice.

Diamondbacks starter Tyler Skaggs (1-3) pitched in and out of trouble while allowing four runs and seven hits over five innings.

Athletics 12, Tigers 4

In Detroit, Seth Smith homered, doubled and drove in four runs, and the Oakland Athletics avoided a three-game sweep by beating the Detroit Tigers 12-4 Thursday in a matchup of AL playoff contenders.

Oakland is tied with Baltimore for the wild-card lead. The Tigers are two games behind Central-leading Chicago.

Josh Donaldson hit a go-ahead single in a four-run sixth inning that made it 6-3, then had an RBI double to cap a six-run ninth that included Smith's three-run double.

Pat Neshek (2-1) retired the only batter he faced and got the win.

Anibal Sanchez (3-6), who held Cleveland hitless for 6 2-3 innings in his last start, gave up six runs on six hits and two walks in 5 2-3 innings.

Rangers 3, Angels 1

In Anaheim, California, Adrian Beltre hit a tiebreaking two-run homer off Angels closer Ernesto Frieri in the ninth inning, and the Rangers dealt yet another blow to Los Angeles' fading playoff hopes.

Yu Darvish (16-9) held the Angels to four hits and struck out nine in a scintillating eight-inning duel with Zack Greinke, who gave up five hits and struck out eight.

Beltre then rewarded Darvish with his 34th homer to left field off Frieri (3-2), who wasted a phenomenal start by Greinke for the second time in six days.

Joe Nathan earned his 34th save.

Texas (89-60) improved the AL's best record and stayed four games ahead of Oakland (85-64) in the AL West by taking two of three from the Angels.

Los Angeles (81-69) dropped 4 1/2 games behind the Athletics and Baltimore in the AL wild-card standings.

Royals 4, White Sox 3

In Kansas City, Missouri, Alex Rios was thrown out at the plate, Alexei Ramirez was picked off third base and the AL Central-leading Chicago White Sox again failed to come up with a clutch hit in a 4-3 loss to the Kansas City Royals on Thursday night.

Eric Hosmer singled home the winning run with two outs in the ninth inning. The White Sox stayed two games ahead of Detroit, which lost in the afternoon to Oakland, with 13 games remaining.

The Royals beat the Chicago for the ninth time in their last 11 meetings.

Jesse Crain (2-3) took the loss. Greg Holland (7-4) worked a scoreless ninth for the victory.

Yankees 10, Blue Jays 7

In New York, streaking Ichiro Suzuki hit a go-ahead, two-run double in a seven-run fourth inning capped by Nick Swisher's grand slam, and the New York Yankees beat the Toronto to open a one-game AL East lead over idle Baltimore.

After struggling for much of the summer, the Yankees completed a three-game sweep of the Blue Jays and have won five in a row, their longest winning string since June 23-27.

Backed by an 8-2 lead, Phil Hughes (16-12) lasted just five innings. David Robertson got three outs for his second save this season and first since May 8.

Suzuki homered in the third, then doubled in the fourth. His ninth hit in 10 at-bats chased Aaron Laffey (3-6).

Rays 7, Red Sox 4

In St. Petersburg, Florida, B.J. Upton hit a game-ending, three-run homer off Vicente Padilla, capping Tampa Bay's six-run ninth inning and lifting the Rays over Boston.

Tampa Bay salvaged a split of the four-game series and remained 5 1/2 games behind Oakland and Baltimore for the second AL wild-card slot. The Rays have 12 games left on their schedule.

Andrew Bailey (1-1) gave up four hits and a walk before Padilla came in to face Upton, who drove a 2-1 pitch over the wall in center for his 24th homer.

Burke Badenhop (2-2) recorded one out to get the win.

Indians 4, Twins 3

In Cleveland, Casey Kotchman hit an RBI single with the bases loaded in the 10th inning and the Cleveland Indians topped Minnesota.

Pinch hitter Shin-Soo Choo doubled off the wall in left-center to start the inning against reliever Anthony Swarzak (3-5). Choo took third on Jason Kipnis' groundout before Carlos Santana and Michael Brantley were intentionally walked to load the bases.

Kotchman fouled off the first pitch before bouncing a ground ball up the middle against the drawn-in infield for his third hit of the game.

Esmil Rogers (3-1) pitched a perfect inning for the win. Both teams used five pitchers.

Manning, Brown help Giants rout Panthers, 36-7

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP)—Eli Manning didn't need a fourth-quarter comeback Thursday night.

The two-time Super Bowl champion quarterback, running back Andre Brown and the rest of the New York Giants finished off the Carolina Panthers way before that.

Brown ran for a career-high 113 yards and two touchdowns in his first NFL start to help the Giants rout the Panthers 36-7.

Four days after rallying from 14 points down to beat Tampa Bay, the Giants dominated the first half, scoring on their first four possessions to build a 20-0 lead.

The defending champion Giants (2-1) were without three starters but it hardly mattered.

Brown—waived by five different teams—including the Panthers—since coming into the league as a fourth-round draft pick in 2009—got his chance Thursday night when Ahmad Bradshaw sat out with a neck injury.

Brown said he thought about getting cut by the Panthers before the game - and it inspired him.

"I was walking into the stadium and I have to go by the spot where I parked my car," Brown said. "I felt a little fire, no doubt. I'm so happy to come out here. It really humbled me. It really shows that everything is not guaranteed. You know, I'm just going to ride this wave. Hopefully, it's a long wave."

Ramses Barden is hoping to ride that same wave.

Barden caught nine passes for a career-high 138 yards in his first NFL start. He played in place of Hakeem Nicks.

Of course it helps that the guy throwing you the ball is named Manning. He completed 27 of 35 passes for 288 yards with one touchdown and no interceptions.

On the other side, second-year quarterback Cam Newton struggled all night and was pressured into three interceptions. The Panthers (1-2) had five turnovers, including two by returner Joe Adams.

Newton had no luck running the read option against the Giants. He was held to 6 yards rushing a week after running for a career-high 71 yards against the Saints.

"We got some licks on him, when he kept the ball, and that's something that was lacking last week," Giants coach Tom Coughlin said. "You have to be disciplined. You have to have people in the right spots, or he'll take full advantage of it."

Panthers coach Ron Rivera likened the loss to a lesson you learn from your big brother.

"They came in and slapped us around and dragged us to the ground a little bit," Rivera said. "Hopefully, we learn from it a little bit. Hopefully, we learn from it and, hopefully, we don't like it and we come back focused."

Mixing run and pass, the Giants dominated the opening half, outgaining the Panthers 303-125.

Manning completed 19 of 25 passes for 208 yards in the first half, including a 14-yard touchdown pass to Martellus Bennett to cap the Giants' game-opening drive and set the tone. It capped an eight-play, 80-yard drive and marked the third straight game the Panthers have given up a touchdown on an opponent's first drive.

For Rivera and the Panthers the first half was a nightmare.

"When you put yourself in a hole like that it's tough trying to claw and scratch yourself back up," Rivera said. "And that's really what happened. That's the type of game they want you to be in. That's trouble. When you get behind they can cut those guys loose on the pass rush."

Brown repeatedly bounced off tacklers and Barden had little trouble getting open against a Carolina defense that failed to pressure Manning.

Brown ran 13 times for 71 yards and a touchdown last week against Tampa Bay and surpassed that total by the end of the first quarter with 77 yards on seven.

Barden had 123 yards on seven catches at halftime.

Before Thursday night, the fourth-year receiver had never managed more than nine catches for 94 yards receiving in a season.

"At this level, you never know when you're going to get an opportunity, you've got to be prepared for it," Manning said. "Andre Brown is a great example. He's a guy we drafted, he bounced around, and we brought him back. He was on the bubble to make the team, and here you go. Ahmad (Bradshaw) gets hurt, and he ran great, he pass-protected."

"He did get off to a bit of a shaky start. He went left when he was supposed to run right on the first play. We had a little talk and got him settled down, and after that, he did very, very well."

Any hopes that the Panthers would turn things around in the second half were slowed when rookie returner Adams fumbled trying to catch the opening kickoff, resulting in another field goal for Lawrence Tynes.

Tynes finished with five field goals on the night.

The Panthers didn't get on the board until midway through the third quarter when Newton leaped over the pile from a yard out.

Newton said it wasn't what the Giants did but what the Panthers didn't do.

"Who wants to supports something that puts on a performance of embarrassment out there, and that's what that was," Newton said. "If I was a fan of the Carolina Panthers I would be holding my head down in shame at the product that was out there."

Newton said the Panthers problem was execution, not anything the Giants did to stop them.

"We have to fix it," Newton said.

ATLANTA (AP)—In the one week Tiger Woods had away from golf during the FedEx Cup playoffs, Nick Faldo said he had lost his aura, Greg Norman said he was intimidated by Rory McIlroy and Johnny Miller claimed that Woods once wanted lessons from him.

"Nice week, huh?" Woods said, grinning.

Even better was to be back on the course Thursday at the Tour Championship, where Woods had the final word for at least for one day. He kept the ball in play at East Lake, chipped in for one of his six birdies and wound up with a 4-under 66 for a share of the lead with Justin Rose.

It was the first step toward what Woods hopes is a third FedEx Cup title, and another $10 million bonus.

"I probably could have gotten a couple more out of it," Woods

Woods makes an early statement at East Lake

said about his opening round. "But I was probably right on my number."

McIlroy, playing with Woods for the fifth time in these FedEx Cup playoffs, got up-and-down from short of the par-3 18th hole for a 69. McIlroy is trying to become the first player since Woods in 2006 to win three straight PGA Tour events in the same season, and he wasn't overly alarmed by his start.

"Wish I could have shot a couple shots better," McIlroy said. "But I'm in a good position going into tomorrow."

The week began with Norman saying that Woods was intimidated by McIlroy, a suggestion that both players found amusing. While it's doubtful that inspired Woods, he played as if he wasn't ready to let McIlroy win a third straight playoff event and capture the FedEx Cup.

McIlroy, who has won three of his last four tournaments, and Woods are among the top five seeds at East Lake who only have to win the Tour Championship to claim the largest payoff in golf. Woods wasn't interested in what anyone else was doing.

"Just winning," he said. "Winning takes care of everything."

Jack Nicklaus even weighed in on Norman's comments to FoxSports.com. Nicklaus was doing a radio interview with ESPN 980 in Washington when told about Norman's remarks that McIlroy intimidated Woods. Nicklaus said playfully, "Quiet, Greg. Quiet. Down, boy."

"I think Tiger has a lot of wins left in him," Nicklaus said. "He does have a lot more competition. During the couple of years when Tiger wasn't really there, all of a sudden you have Rory McIlroy, Keegan Bradley and I could probably name a half-dozen other guys that have all won and learned how to win in Tiger's absence. They're not scared of him anymore."

Rose, who hasn't won since the World Golf Championship at Doral in March, swiftly moved up the leaderboard late in his round with three birdies over the last five holes, and the last one was memorable. From the back of the green on the par-3 18th, Rose faced a 50-foot putt with some 20 feet of break from right to left. It looked wide the whole way until it snapped back toward the cup.

Equally impressive was chipping in from some 20 yards short of the 14th green for the birdie that started his big run.

Rose is 24th in the FedEx Cup, meaning he would have to win and everyone at the top of the standings would have to falter. The way Woods started, that looked improbable. Rose checked the leaderboard early on, not to see his projected standing, but to get an idea of how the course was playing.

That part was easy to decipher. On a warm day, with the sun finally breaking through cloud cover in the middle of the afternoon, no one was tearing up the place.

"Obviously, I realized it was time to be patient," Rose said. "No one was really going low ... so I always had that in the back of my mind."

Scott Piercy ran off three straight birdies late in his round until he stumbled in the rough behind the 18th green and finished with a double bogey for a 67, tied with Steve Stricker, Matt Kuchar and Bo Van Pelt. Stricker was the only player in the 30-man field without a bogey.

Hunter Mahan appeared to snap out of his funk from missing out on the Ryder Cup with a 68, tied with a group that included Brandt Snedeker, who is among the top five seeds. The others are Phil Mickelson, who opened with a 69, and Nick Watney, who brought up the rear with a 75.

Despite the Tour Championship featuring the top 30 on the PGA Tour, the focus again returned to the top two players.

A boisterous gallery lined the fairways and crowded behind every green to see the latest edition of Tiger and Rory, and they didn't disappoint. McIlroy is playing East Lake for the first time, and he struggled with the Bermuda rough around the greens.

"If you don't hit fairways, it's hard," McIlroy said. "If you hit the ball in the rough here, it's very, very difficult to get any control on your ball."

Woods again had McIlroy's number when playing together, even though Boy Wonder is winning more trophies. Woods has posted the lower score in four of the five rounds they have played together in the playoffs. The exception was Crooked Stick, when McIlroy opened with a 64 and Woods had a 65.

Woods, as usual, didn't read too much into that.

"I enjoy playing with Rory," he said. "He's a great kid. Over the years, there are certain pairings for me that I've enjoyed, and Rory is one of them."

Kanoa bounces back, edges POI

Kanoa Resort recovered from its debut loss in the 2012 Tan Holdings Inter-Company Basketball League after outclassing POI, 71-67, last Saturday at the Gillette Multipurpose Gymnasium of the TSL Sports Complex.

Kanoa, which bowed to CTSI-D&Q in the league opener early this month, 86-91, avoided a 0-2 record after drawing another big game from Ryan Manglona. The lanky forward, who had 23 markers in Kanoa's first match, fired 20 against POI, making 19 of them in the fourth period. Manglona single-handedly carried the fight for Kanoa in the playoff canto, as he drilled 13 of the team's last 15 points, including three crucial triples.

With Kanoa holding a shaky 49-48 advantage at the end of the third period, Manglona opened the fourth with back-to-back baskets and a few minutes later, he started a scoring spree, connecting on three triples and three more field goals. The Kanoa gunner held his ground against POI's Ferdie Arago and Anthony Esteves, who combined for 16 of their 19 markers in the playoff canto.

Esteves had to help Arago run POI's offense in the fourth period after Ramsa Tenepere went cold in the homestretch. Tenepere had a game-high 27 points, but was scoreless in the fourth frame.

While Tenepere ran out of steam in the fourth, Manglona, who was without a field goal in the first three quarters,

In the second game, Shirley's Coffee

Shop grabbed a share of the lead with CTSI-D&Q after beating JP Centre.

Shirley's played better in the second half en route to the 10-point win. It started the second half with a 32-point production in the third, turning a 21-32 deficit to a 53-47 advantage.

Originally headlined for last year, the main event between Trench Tech's Martin "Ningbo-Slice" Cepeda (4-1) and Ground Fu Frenchman Ferriid "The Hurricane" Kheder (18-10-1 NC), was postponed because of an injury endured by Cepeda during training.

The curtain closer is expected to bring some fireworks, granted that both fighters weigh-in somewhere between 175 and 180 lbs.

Kheder's experience is nothing to take lightly, however he is coming off a slate of five losses and a no-contest since December 2010. A win for Cepeda could potentially help him land an off-island opportunity down the road.

"We call it the Marianas League because we would like to cater to all the islands in the Marianas," the NMIFA technical director said.

The nine teams will compete in a 10-week season and the club with the highest points in Division 2 will be promoted to Division 1. The club with the most points in Division 1 will be declared the champion, while the team with the least points will be relegated to Division 2. Teams will earn 3 points

(4-5), of Guam's Countershot MMA team, will have his hands full against Trench Tech's Fasi "Quikdraw" Jesse (9-4), who vows to keep the belt on home soil.

Meanwhile, Trench Tech bantamweight champion Mark "The Dark" Nuique (8-1) is looking to bounce back from his first ever loss in a must-win setting as his local title is on the line against Zalaka's Jacob "One Blow" Ilo (0-2).

The most recent alteration to the fight card features "Shishka" Bob Alvarez lined up across Marianas Elite's Vince "Vincsanity" Pua (2-1) at 150 lbs.

In addition, a fourth bantamweight (135 lbs) match has been added to the aforementioned trio, which features Trench Tech /Tiyon Tough Walkers' Roman "Boom" Alvarez tangling with Josh "Oh My Gosh" Cruz.

Guam, has been confirmed to take on Garry Ray, while as reported, Trench Tech's Vince "The Clinch" Masga (3-1) will be pitted against Zalaka's Joe Duenas (3-1); and Saipan independent fighter Ray "Faluwasch" Teregeyo (0-1) is paired against Lights Out Gym's Derick Padrones.

Other MMA matchups include Wusstig's Guahan comrade Joe "Young Blood" Ramirez, out of Underworld Xtreme, colliding with Team Haga newcomer Travis "Flying Man" Eubanks, at 170 lbs; Trench Tech's Donavin Mendiola debuting against Pwang's Peter "Project K" Keju (0-2) at 160 lbs; and Saipan independent fighter Leo Mendiola squaring off against Tavita independent Kevin Villagomez at 120 lbs.

The K-1 pairings show a featherweight match between Zeng Zung's Rommel Usi, who was scoreless in the first half, came out smoking for Shirley's in the period. He began the second half with five straight points and ended the third with a triple to score 13 points in that period alone and put Shirley's in the driver's seat.

JP Centre lost the upper hand in the third, as only Dino Valdez and John March Ong scored more than one field goal at the start of the second half.

Valdez and Ong found support from Ferdie de la Torre in the fourth, but JP Centre failed to reclaim the lead, as Fradel Sedillo's ran the show for Shirley's, nailing 14 of his 26 markers in the payoff canto.

Meanwhile, CTSI-D&Q was awarded its second win in as many games after a no-show from defending champion Fiesta Resort & Spa (0-2).

Roach said he needs "to re-ignite the killer instinct Manny has lacked in the last (two) fights with Marquez," whom he narrowly beat by split and majority decision, respectively.

The Sonics creamed LD Prime, 68-37, in Wednesday's Saipan Rotary Club Youth Basketball League U20 division matchup at the Gilbert C. Ada Gymnasium.

In addition, Rotary's U16 season is set to resume this morning at the Ada Gym starting at 9am with RBC's D-South (0-1) taking on sister squad Rollers 1 (1-0), followed by the CNMI junior national girls team against RBC's Rollers 2 (1-0) at 10:15am. Proa (1-0) will end the games against Hi-5 (0-1) at 11:30am.

The Sonics boomed out of the gate and amassed an early 28-7 lead in the opening 10 minutes. Paul Mariano led seven other contributors with 8 points in the first quarter and the group trudged ahead, 44-13, after the second period.

The Sonics spread the ball around for another generous yield provided by seven different pairs of hands. Ezra Caro

It looks as though Shane "Pika-Boo" Alvarez's (7-1) opponent will not be unveiled until fight night as he is still listed to appear against a mystery foe in this coming Friday's Trench Tech Purebred Promotions' Rites Of Passage 13: Destiny.

Notably, Countershot MMA's Jared "Smiley Face" Santos (0-1) and Zalaka's Ian Iriate have been removed from the card, but new names such as Trench Tech/Tiyan Tough Walkers' "Shishka" Bob Alvarez as well as a host of others have been added into the mix.

Santos has already made three ROP appearances and may appear in the ensuing Trench Warz event this December.

ROP 13 is highlighted by an anticipated Saipan vs. France main event and not one, but two title bouts.

The mixed martial arts action is scheduled to go down in Saipan World Resort's Royal Taga Ball Room starting at 8pm. A total of 12 MMA bouts and four K-1 kickboxing exhibitions are tentatively listed on the fight card.
